—The person paying the amount under protest and getting the property released—Right of, for recovery of the amount but not for damages or mesne profits—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), Ss. 183 and 233 (m).

The revenue authorities, in pursuance of the provisions of S. 5 of the Act, attached a she-buffalo in the possession of D, on the ground that the latter was the heir of R, the original debtor, and the she-buffalo was the property of the deceased. D objected to the attachment on the ground that he was not the heir of R and that the she-buffalo belonged to him; but his petition of objection was summarily dismissed by the Collector. Thereupon D paid under protest in writing duly signed by him the amount of the takavi demand and the fees for attachment, and procured the release of the she-buffalo. During the intervening period, i.e., between the date of the attachment and removal of the buffalo from the possession of D and the date of its release, the calf of the buffalo died in consequence of its separation from its mother. D brought a suit for a refund of the amount with interest and for recovery of damages caused by the death of the buffalo calf and for the price of the milk of which the plaintiff was deprived on account of the unlawful attachment of the she-buffalo.

APPROVER.

Held, that D's right of suit is restricted to the recovery of the amount paid. He is not competent to sue the Government for damages either for the price of milk or the buffalo calf. 21 All. 341, Dist. (Lindsay, A. C. J., Iqbal Ahmad and Sen, J.J.) DAYA RAM v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

—S. 2 (7) (a)—Possession of lead.

—Possibility of same being used for industrial purposes—Duty of Magistrate to enquire.

In a case under S. 19 (1), the quantity of lead found with the accused and the neighbourhood were such as to suggest that the lead was used for fishing purposes. The Magistrate merely asked each of the accused whether he admitted having the lead for sale without licence although they were not represented by counsel and on their pleading guilty convicted them.

Held, that the Magistrate should have in his examination of the accused put some questions with a view to elucidating from them whether they were prima facie vendors of lead for industrial, that is, fishing, purposes within the meaning of Arms Act, S. 2 (7) (a). —Ss. 4, 13 and 19 (e)—Arm—Meaning.

—Purpose regulates whether an implement should be deemed to be arms—C clasp-knife 5½ inches long is an arm.

The criterion whether an implement should be deemed to be arms is the purpose for which the implement is primarily intended. A clasp knife which has a blade 5½ inches long with a pointed end and is fitted to a long handle and turns over into the handle falls within the meaning of the word "arms". 1 L. B. R. 271; 3 L. B. ARMS ACT (1878), S. 13.*—Ss. 4 and 19—Arm—Meaning.

—Primary purpose and not use for which an implement is used is the test—Axe or knife does not become "arm" within S. 4 by merely using it for offending or defending on particular occasions.

It is always the purpose for which an implement is primarily used which determines the question whether it does or does not fall within the definition of "arms" in S. 4. Implements of ordinary domestic use such as an axe or knife cannot fall within the definition of arms by the mere fact that they have been used as weapons of offence or defence on particular occasions. —Ss. 5 and 19—Manufacturing Kirpans.

—Manufacturing Kirpans without license is an offence.

The exemption only applies to kirpans actually in existence and possessed or carried by Sikhs and not to the manufacture of kirpans by Sikhs. A Sikh is not prevented by any provision in the Arms Act from dealing with a kirpan which he possesses in any way he likes. A Sikh, however, is not exempted by the entry in Schedule II from the operation of the prohibition as to manufacture contained in section 5 of the Act. (Scott-Smith and Harrison, J.J.) EMPEROR v. —S. 19 (e)—Going armed.

—Going armed means carrying weapon intending to use it if necessary—Going need not be habitual.

S. 19, cl. (e) does not include the word "habitually" and the words "goes armed" connote carrying a weapon with the intention of using it when the necessity arises. Even an isolated act of carrying a weapon in contravention of the license would amount to an offence under S. 19, Cl. (e). The words "goes armed," would imply a motion as well as the possession of the arms in contravention of the license, and mean nothing more than carrying a weapon with the intention of using it as a weapon when the necessity or opportunity arises for its use. The words do not necessarily connote a habitual course of conduct. Where, therefore, an accused gets himself possessed of a sword with the intention of using it as a weapon for the purpose of attacking his opponents and uses it, while using that weapon he must have moved about and he would therefore be considered to have gone armed within the meaning of cl. (e), S. 19. A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 35; 24 All. 454 and 37 Bom. 181, Rel. on. (Mirza and Patkar, J.J.) MANJUBHAI GORDHANDAS v. EMPEROR. 53 Bom. 604 = 31 Bom. L. R. 536 = 119 I. C. 641 =

If a person carries on his person a small weapon such as a pistol, a dagger, or a blade of a chhavi, he naturally puts it in his pocket or dab, and if with that weapon in his pocket or dab he is in his house or in his village or in a bazaar or in a Court compound, it cannot be inferred that he was so carrying the weapon with the intention specified in S. 20. —Intention and possibility of using are essential.

The offence of going armed with fire-arm is considerably more narrow than the offence of being in possession merely of fire-arms. The expression 'going armed' clearly indicates two things, namely, firstly an intention to use it as a fire-arm and secondly the possibility of using it. House occupied by person, his wife and father aged 80—Chhavi blade in wife's possession—Mere fact of father being 80 years old is not sufficient to establish person's possession of chhavi.

In the case of a house occupied by a joint family there is an initial presumption that an article found therein is in the possession of the head of the family. A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 272, Rel. on. Thus where a house was occupied by a person, his father who was 80 years old, and the person's wife and a chhavi blade was found in wife's possession the mere fact that the father is 80 years old is not sufficient to establish that the person was in possession of the chhavi. —Penal Code, S. 120-B—Agreement of parties makes offence complete—Conspiracy to possess fire-arms—Conspiracy in respect of particular fire-arms need not be proved.

An offence under S. 120-B consists in the conspiracy without any reference to the subject-matter of the conspiracy. It is true that the law does not take notice of the intention or the state of mind of the offender and there must be some overt act to give expression to that intention, but that overt act in a case of conspiracy under S. 120-B consists in the agreement of the parties. Mulcahy v. The Queen (L.R. 3 H. L. 306, 1868), Rel. on. The definition of conspiracy in S. 120-B excludes the agreement to commit an offence, from the category of such conspiracies, in which it is necessary that the agreement should be followed by some act. —S. 10—Effect.

—Effect of S. 10 is to stay earlier proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code.—Cr. P. Code, S. 145.

Some char lands became the subject-matter of proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, and at the time of the proceedings being initiated an attachment order was made against the lands. Various steps were taken in those proceedings and subsequently the Magistrate after reviewing the situation passed an order directing that the lands be released from attachment under S. 145 and decided to replace those proceedings with others under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, 1920. It was contended that S. 10 of that Act was intended to apply to proceedings under S. 145 so far as their institution or carrying on was concerned and not to the attachment order made under that section and that once an attachment was made, S. 10 conferred no right on the Collector to make a further attachment under that Act.

Held, that if the contention were sound it would result in nullifying the provisions of the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act of 1920. The provisions of S. 10 were wide enough to apply to all proceedings, including an attachment that may have been had under S. 145. The effect of S. 10, Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, would, therefore, be to stay the earlier proceedings under S. 145, Criminal Pro. Code. 13 C.W.N. 125 and A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 631, Dist. The maintenance of a private ferry is in contravention of S. 16 of the Act for which the person maintaining it may be liable for damages and also an injunction may issue against him. If, in addition, to maintaining such a prohibited private ferry he carries passengers and property for hire he is liable criminally under S. 28 of the Act and each trip is a separate offence. A prosecution had been sanctioned by the General Committee under S. 449 of the old Act (III B. C. of 1899), but the case was actually started under the new Act (III B. C. of 1923) by the new Corporation and notice upon the party was issued and an order of demolition was passed.

Held, that whether the proceedings were under S. 363 or 364 of Act III, B. C. of 1923, they were irregular and the order of the Municipal Magistrate was not justified as the party had not been heard by the Corporation before sanction for prosecution was given.

Held, further that the proceedings under S. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899) could only be started by the General Committee and, therefore, in respect of unauthorized structures which existed before 1st April, 1924, when the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923 came into force, there was, after the passing of the latter Act, nobody competent to take proceedings under S. 449 of the Act of 1899. A person, who was charged in respect of an offence under Ss. 466 (d) and 574, Calcutta Municipal Act (Act III of 1899), was acquitted on a preliminary objection that the prosecution did not lie, inasmuch as, though the provisions of Ss. 466 and 574 of the Act in question had been extended to Howrah by a notification under Act III of 1899, that Act had been repealed and re-enacted by the Calcutta Municipal Act (Act III of 1923), and no fresh notification had been issued extending any part of the new Act to Howrah. It was contended on behalf of the opposite party that though the Act of 1899 had been repealed, a prosecution under it was competent by virtue of provisions of S. 25, Bengal General Clauses Act (I of 1899). Held, that the provisions of S. 25, Bengal General Clauses Act, indicated that the notification is attracted to the provisions so re-enacted, and that any prosecution founded upon it must be under the new Act. Therefore prosecution under the old Act was not competent. (Chotanar and Gregory, JJ.) S. MUKHERJEE v. HARUN TAR MAHAMED & CO.

On such a warrant the business of the officer who fixes the sum of money is to see that he fixes a reasonable sum of money having regard to all the circumstances and that it is not an excessive one and it is sufficient, so far as the person under arrest is concerned, that he is willing to execute a bond in that amount. S. 234 of the Municipal Act is a section of emergency referring to deposit of moveable property on the roadside. The right of the Municipality as to the road is governed by S. 30 by which the property in roads is vested in the Commissioners for the purposes given in the Act. There is no right to collect rent, toll or any tax, unless there is a contract creating the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. If the provisions of S. 335 of the Municipal Act do not apply to any place like Lohardagga, accused who prevented the lessee of the Municipality of Lohardagga from realising rent from the shop-keepers or persons exposing their goods for sale along the road, not on a Municipal market nor on a market to which the provisions of Part X applied were not guilty of an offence under S. 143, Penal Code. —S. 209—Requisition.

—Municipality accepting gift of land on condition of erecting fencing at their own cost—Donor is not guilty of breach of requisition.

The accused was served with a requisition under S. 209 of the Municipal Act requiring him to cause a fence to be erected for the protection of passengers and pedestrians over the bank of a tank belonging to the accused. The accused disobeyed this requisition, his grounds being that in 1898 certain land on the side of the tank was made over by him to the municipality and conditions were imposed by him on the municipality at the time to the effect that if in future any fencing had to be erected or was required on the side of the tank the municipality would erect such a fencing at their own cost. In 1914, the municipality caused certain departmental estimates to be prepared for fencing and for acquiring the extra strip of land on the side of the tank but that inasmuch as the funds did not permit of this work being done at once the work was left in abeyance and in September, 1922, the requisition, referred to above, was served on the accused under S. 209 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

Held, that there is nothing in the Municipal Act itself which can remotely suggest that the Municipality is incompetent to enter into a binding engagement of this description and therefore the Municipality is not in the circumstances of the particular case, competent to require the accused to cause a fencing to be erected at his own cost. BIHAR AND ORISSA FOOD ADULTERATION ACT (II OF 1919).*—S. 9 (2)—Proviso—Procedure.

Application to have sample analysed refused—Magistrate was wrong in refusing application for analysis of sample in custody of local authority.

A complaint was lodged against the applicant, based on an inspection made by the Inspector of the applicant's factory. The inspection related to the manufacture of mustard oil which the applicant carried on in his factory. Sample of oil was taken by the Inspector in three phials one of which was sent to the Chemical Examiner under S. 8 of the Act and the report of the Examiner showed that the sample was adulterated. That was the reason of the prosecution. During the trial, the applicant applied, under S. 9 (2) of the Act that the sample in the hands of the local authority, which was kept by them under sub-S. (2), S. 7 may be sent to the Government analyst. The trying Magistrate held that by reason of the proviso to S. 9 he was prevented from acceding to the application.

Held, that the trying Magistrate was wrong in not allowing the petition of the applicant to have the sample, in the custody of the local authority, analysed under S. 8. (Wort, J.) GOPINATH SAHU v. ARRAH MUNICIPALITY.

—S. 515—Interpretation.

Magistrate may direct Municipal Commissioner to take measures in matters other than those referred to in sections mentioned in sub-S. (1)—Court is not competent to consider whether Legislature should have conferred such powers on Court—Mere residence is enough qualification for complaint—Mental assurance that licence would be granted does not absolve from duty not to cause nuisance inside—General considerations about public convenience should not override main purpose of section.

BOMBAY CITY MUNICIPAL ACT (1888), S. 515.

Purely as a matter of construction there is nothing in the terms of the section to justify the contention that the second part of cl. (a) of sub-S. (2), which relates to the direction to the Municipal Commissioner to take such measures as to such Magistrate shall seem practicable and reasonable, applies only to the exercise of the powers under any one of the sections mentioned in sub-S. (1). The scheme of the section clearly is to give the right to any person to make a complaint where there is any nuisance or where in the exercise of any of the powers conferred by the respective sections, more than the least practicable nuisance has been created. The extent of the power of the Court is indicated in sub-S. (2), and the whole of cl. (a) of sub-S. (2) applies both to the case of nuisance, as well as to the case where in the exercise of powers under certain sections of the Act more than the least practicable nuisance is created. The argument, that the Legislature could not have contemplated that a Court should control and regulate the discretion of the Municipal Commissioner as to matters, about which the Municipal Commissioner would possess special knowledge, is not acceptable. This section appears to have been enacted for the protection of persons residing in the city; and it provides a remedy which is open to any resident of the City. The extent of the power of the Court is to be found in the words of cl. (a) of sub-S. (2). That provision undoubtedly implies some limitation upon the powers of the Commissioner and so some control over his acts where a proper case for giving direction to him in connection with a nuisance is made out. It is not open to a Court to consider whether the Legislature should have conferred such powers upon the Court or not. It may be that the absence of proceedings under this section has tended to create an impression as to the meaning and scope of this section which is not accurate. It is open to the Court to consider whether the existence of stables, having regard to all the facts, is or may be dangerous to life or injurious to health, even apart from the question of malaria. Whether the complainant is a paying guest or a tenant is not material. If he resides in the house that is sufficient for the purpose of enabling him to complain of the nuisance. Where a complaint was made against certain stables as a nuisance and the owner had incurred heavy costs in putting them up, and had sound grounds for expecting grant of licence through the support of the Municipal Commissioner, held that though he may have felt assured in his mind on account of the support which he had of the Municipal Commissioner, so far as the licence was concerned, he was not absolved from the obligation to see that no nuisance was caused by him to any residents in the locality. It has also to be remembered that while under the Rent Act, he may not be able to eject his present tenants, this nuisance itself, if allowed to remain, may be an effective means of enabling him to get possession. Where it was argued that the Commissioner's discretion should not be interfered with so as to affect public convenience, Held that such general considerations cannot be allowed to override the main purposes of the section in dealing with a particular nuisance.

Per Crump, J.—The circumstance that the wrongdoer is in some sense a public benefactor has never been considered a sufficient reason for refusing to protect by injunction an individual whose rights are being persistently infringed. 2 Ch. ## —S. 515—Nuisance.

Private and public nuisances can be remedied by injunction by one or all residents affected—Court can order refusal to grant license for stables but the order does not govern all cases of license for stables.

It is necessary for the protection of the health and comfort of the inhabitants of a big city like Bombay or Calcutta that any resident, who is affected by a nuisance in the manner mentioned in S. 3 (z) of the Municipal Act, should have a right to go to a Magistrate over the head of the Commissioner or the Corporation and ask that the Commissioner should be restrained from exercising his powers so as to affect the complainant's individual right as resident by the creation of a private nuisance. If private nuisance affects two or three houses, the inhabitants of the two or three houses might either join in a complaint before the Magistrate and ask the Magistrate to decide specifically that the particular nuisance is a private nuisance affecting the residents of houses A, B and C. With regard to a public nuisance also, any resident of Bombay can ask for an order under S. 515, and, if the Court finds a public nuisance proved, the order of the Court would give relief to the public of the locality as against the nuisance, and vacating of any one or more houses would not mean an abatement of the nuisance in respect of the public. In the case of a public nuisance, no particular limits need be defined. The relief which the Court can grant, under S. 515 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, in cases of public as well as private nuisance is inter alia, abatement of the nuisance by ordering the Commissioner not to grant a license for stables, etc. But it does not follow from the Court's making an order on the Commissioner that he should not grant a license, that that order is to govern all circumstances and all cases at all times. Where the Court passes an order under S. 515 to abate a nuisance with reference to a particular house, and that house falls vacant subsequent to the passing of the order and is not to be used any more for purposes other than those connected with the stables, the order ceased to have any operation. ## —S. 23 (3)—Disobedience.

Accused knowing that disobedience will result in conflict with police—Disobedience of order under S. 23 (3) constitutes offence under S. 188, I. P. C.

Where having regard to the circular issued by the accused and his admissions that he convened the meeting, there is adequate ground for drawing the inference that the accused knew that the disobedience of the order of the Commissioner of Police would at least result in a conflict with police and the disobedience of the order under S. 23 (3) in such a case fulfils all the conditions necessary to constitute an offence under Penal Code, S. 188. ## —S. 23 (3)—Promulgation of order.

Order misdescribed as notification is not vitiated—Meeting convened against order of Police Commissioner—Order held duly promulgated under Penal Code, S. 188.

On 19th July, 1920, the Commissioner of Police issued an order, styling it a "notification" under S. 23 (3) prohibiting the President, the Secretary, the members of the Managing Committee and the members of the Girni Kamgar Union from holding, convening, or calling together any assembly of mill hands or employers of the textile mills of Bombay for one week from the date of the order. The notification was duly promulgated in the mill area. On 13th July, 1929, a circular was issued purporting to be signed by six persons including the accused inviting the strikers to attend the meeting. The meeting was held in the evening and in consequence the accused were placed before a Magistrate who convicted them under I. P. C., S. 143.

BOMBAY CITY POLICE ACT (1902), S. 23.

Held, that in issuing the order under S. 23 (3) the Commissioner of Police properly exercised his discretion for the preservation of the public peace and safety and that it was lawfully promulgated within the meaning of Penal Code, S. 188.

Held further, that the order in writing was not vitiated by the misdescription as a notification. Sharp v. Wakefield, (1891) A. C. 17; A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 1, Ref. (Patkar and Wild, J.J.) BHALCHANDRA TRIMBAK v. EMPEROR. 54 Bom. 35=123 I. C. 497=

—Hindu procession proceeding in particular authorised street—Mahomedan procession coming in opposite direction ignoring orders of police to go by another route—Accused are guilty under Penal Code, S. 153.

In ordinary circumstances undoubtedly a police constable has not the power to stop a person from proceeding along a particular street and order him to go by another. He can stop him for a certain time in order to regulate traffic so as to prevent the traffic getting mixed up and obstructing passage along the street. Where the accused Mahomedans formed themselves into a procession, and proceeded along a certain route at the time when another procession of Hindus was passing in the opposite direction along the same route as settled by authorities, ignoring the orders of policemen stationed there to control traffic that they should go by another route, and a riot with injury to many persons was the result.

—S. 61 (a)—Interpretation.

Lawful excuse must be reasonable and not opposed to any law—Person, driving a bullock-cart unexpectedly kept out till dark, is not reasonable excuse.

The word "excuse" in clause (a) of S. 61 conveys the idea of an excuse that is (a) reasonable and (b) not opposed to any law or principle of law. If an owner or driver of a vehicle fails to have a lamp available in cases where he may find such a lamp required by law, he is not "taking all steps reasonably practicable" to prevent the vehicle being without a lamp. There is, in such a case, an implied duty to have a lamp or lantern available when required; and therefore, the mere excuse that the accused was unexpectedly kept out till dark is not ordinarily a reasonable one except under exceptional circumstances. The accused did not intend either that the race should run on 29th September or that a particular horse should run that day, as the condition of the agreement.

Section 6 does not impose any limitation on the power of any person to make a complaint on oath to the Commissioner of Police. The words "house, room or place" contained in S. 6 have no reference to a particular house, room or place, or to houses, rooms or places if they are owned by one and the same person and are used for a common purpose. The words should be taken broadly as meaning houses, rooms or places apart from the more restricted notion of a tenement. If the houses, rooms or places have substantially been utilized for the common purpose of gambling it would not matter if the houses, rooms or places comprised more than one tenement. The fact therefore that the warrant comprised more than one tenement would not make it a general warrant. Sec. 6 is directed against attempts to seduce the virtue of a woman or a girl for the purpose of prostitution, whether with or without her consent or whatever her age. The section is directed against both a brothel-keeper and her procuress; the brothel-keeper who avails herself of the supply of the procuress is guilty of abetment of the offence under S. 6, Bom. Act XI of 1923. The brothel-keeper facilitates the prostitution and completes it. (Madgavkar, J.) EMPEROR v. VITHABAI SUKHA. 52 Bom. 403=30 Bom. L. R. 613=29 Cr. L. J. 993=

—S. 7—Prostitute.

—Mistress is not necessarily prostitute.

The idea underlying prostitution is that a woman should surrender her body for a monetary consideration to some one who is not in law entitled to have sexual intercourse with her. The position of a mistress is not necessarily that of a prostitute. The relationship is of a more permanent nature than the casual relationship implied in prostitution. Having a stray paramour would not constitute a woman a prostitute. (Mirza and Murphy, J.J.) EMPEROR v. LALYA BAPU.

BOMBAY PRIMARY EDUCATION (DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES) ACT (I OF 1918).

—Ss. 9, 10 and 8 (b)—Scope.

—Provision Mandatory—Right of parents to give education elsewhere not taken away—Object is that the child should get education somewhere—Instruction need not conform to standards in recognised schools.

The words “and after such enquiry as it considers necessary” in S. 9 are not merely permissive. That expression has a compulsory force, regard being had to the object of the enactment, to the wide powers conferred on the committee in derogation of the parents’ rights and to the language of S. 9 itself. It is clearly the function of the Court when a complaint is made under S. 10 to see whether it is proved that the parent failed to send the child to a recognised school, without reasonable cause on or after the date specified in the attendance order. The Act does not inflict penalty on a parent for a mere failure to carry out an attendance order passed under S. 9. For, it is not to be supposed, unless the statute clearly said so, that once attendance order is made by the school committee under S. 9, the parent is for all time deprived of the right to give efficient instruction to his own child otherwise than in a recognised primary school. The main object of the enactment is to see that a child is not left without the benefit of education. It is sufficient if it is receiving efficient instruction elsewhere than in a recognised primary school. It is not essential that the instruction in order to be efficient within the meaning of S. 8 (b) should conform to the standard as adopted in the recognised primary school. (*Shah, Ag. C. There seems to be a difference between "letting for hire" and "plying for hire". If A keeps motors at Poona in order to let them out to clients who wish to go to Mahabaleshwar the motors would not become on that account public conveyances; it would be otherwise if A kept a motor bus which plied regularly between Poona and Mahabaleshwar. —Driving without licence—Licence suspended by Assistant Superintendent of Police under powers orally delegated by Superintendent of Police under S. 12 (2)—Conviction for failure to produce licence is bad—Bombay General Clauses Act (Bom. I of 1904), S. 19.

Where the accused, a licensed public conveyance driver, was convicted under S. 26 (2) of Act VII of 1920 for failure to produce his licence and it was found that his licence had been suspended by Assistant Superintendent of Police under S. 12 (2) in exercise of the powers delegated to him only orally by the Superintendent of Police, Held, the conviction of the accused was illegal. The delegation of powers under the Act of 1920 can be effected but in a case where there has been an exercise of a power under alleged delegated authority, it is clearly necessary that the delegation should be clearly shown. The question of such authority should not depend on a general verbal order but it should be by written orders, giving references to the various sections of the Act and specifying particular powers and duties delegated to an Assistant or Deputy Superintendent of Police. Even if the proposal by A was not proved, but the promotion of the boycott of which he was the alleged proposer, was proved against A and B the fact that all the three were tried together would not render the trial illegal or be a valid reason for acquitting A and B against whom a charge under S. 4 (c) was brought home. —S. 6 (a)—Ex-communication.

—Spurious ceremony not conducted in Thein—Ex-communication for partly political purpose is not exempted under S. 7 (a).

Where a village headman used abusive language towards certain monks who were preaching on Home Rule and kindred matters and had thereby run the risk of being ex-communicated and the first petitioner, who was among the abused, proposed a boycott of the headman and called a meeting of monks and laymen together and purported to perform the rite of ex-communication.

Held, (1) The ex-communication was a spurious ceremony and not having been proclaimed in a Sima or Thein by a properly convened chapter and the procedure laid down in the Vinaya not having been strictly followed, the benefit of S. 7 (a) could not be claimed. (2) It was necessary to prove that the boycott was proposed for bona fide religious purposes; where a motive other than religious is present, the burden of establishing good faith lies heavily on the proposer. (3) The mere fact that the second petitioner allowed the use of his compound does not amount to abetment but having become cognizant of the proposal to boycott on the first day, and having continued to lend his house for the ceremony on the second day, he facilitated the commission of the offence and had intentionally aided the boycott under S. 107, Expl. 2, I. —S. 9—Sanction.

Facts incorrectly set out in the sanction—Sanction is not invalid—Cr. P. Code, Ss. 195 and 196.

The provisions in the Anti-Boycott Act requiring the authority of the Government for a prosecution under the Act correspond to those in S. 196, Code of Criminal Procedure, which is less stringent than S. 195. Strictly the "order" or "authority" required by S. 196 is not the same as the "sanction" referred to in S. 195 and the classes of the offences dealt with by the two sections are quite distinct. Moreover, in the latter section there is no provisions corresponding to sub-section (4) of the earlier section. The intention of the legislature was to ensure that no prosecution for an offence falling within S. 196 or under the Anti-Boycott Act should be launched except on a complaint authorised by the Government, and where this intention is given effect to it is immaterial whether or not all the facts on which the complaint was to be based were stated in the "authority" with meticulous precision. Indeed, it is doubtful if it is even necessary to set out any fact other than the alleged fact that the accused had committed an offence under a certain section of the Act. S. 12 of the Act, 1919, cannot be relied on as justifying the special procedure of the case, because the District Magistrate is the only Magistrate empowered under that section and even the District Magistrate cannot intervene in a case unless there has been a proper preliminary order and unless the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has also previously passed his order under S. 118 of the Cr. P. Code. In such a case, it would be the duty of the District Magistrate to have some good reason for the change over to the Burma Habitual Offenders' Restriction Act, 1919; and Rule 12 of the Rules framed under that Act indicates the class of reasons which would justify such a change. ## —R. 69—Illegality.

—Planting of rubber trees on waste land—Subsequent notification as grazing ground—Order for removal of trees and conviction under rule 69 are illegal.

The petitioner planted rubber trees on State waste land pending his application for a grant in anticipation and paid assessment thereon. The grant was refused and the land notified as a grazing ground whereupon petitioner applied for refund of the revenue paid by him. The Deputy Commissioner passed an order that the petitioner do vacate the land and remove the rubber trees and the revenue paid would be refunded when petitioner vacated. Petitioner failed to remove the trees and was prosecuted under R. 69 and fined for occupying a finally demarcated grazing ground and convicted on his admission that the rubber trees planted by him were still on the land.

Held, that R. 69 did not empower the revenue authorities to order petitioner to remove the trees he had planted and the mere fact that the trees remained on the ground did not constitute occupation of the grazing ground, and that the Magistrate's order that the rubber trees must be cut down, root and branch, within a month was without jurisdiction and must be set aside. ## —R. 69—Procedure.

—Use of grazing ground for purposes other than grazing—Proof as to the ground demarcated and marked with boundary posts must be strict—Procedure indicated.

It is essential in all prosecutions under R. 69 that there should be evidence not only that the grazing ground has been allotted but also that it has been finally demarcated; that is that the boundaries have been clearly marked with permanent posts or visible marks of some kind, so that there is no room for mistake as to the limits of the grazing ground.

The proper procedure in such cases is for the Land Records Officer to file in each case along with his complaint or report a map showing the relevant boundaries of the grazing ground with the demarcation marks and the area alleged to be occupied by the accused within the grazing ground, and for the Court to take evidence that the grazing ground has been allotted and demarcated and that the alleged trespass has been committed. If a building is divided into separate and independent dwellings or tenements and those dwellings or tenements are such that the occupants of them do not to any extent use or occupy the building as a whole in common then even if separate tenements or some of them are actually used as lodging house, the building as a whole does not thereby become a lodging house and only those separate and independent tenements which are used as lodging houses need to be registered and licensed. Note to S. 2 says that the buildings commonly called "tenement lodging houses" should be brought within the operation of the lodging house rules if they have kitchens, privies or other conveniences, in common, that is, if the building as a whole is occupied to any extent in common by the tenants of the separate tenement, but that they do not come within the operation of the lodging house rules if each tenement is entirely independent and provided with its own kitchen and privy, that is, if the building as a whole is not occupied to any extent in common by the tenants of the separate tenements. If a building as a whole is let in lodgings or otherwise occupied to any extent in common by members of more than one family, then it is a lodging house and is subject to the bye-laws. If there is no such common occupation of the building as a whole but there is such common occupation of a particular part of it, then that particular part is a lodging house but the building as a whole is not a lodging house. If neither the building as a whole nor any part of it separately is occupied to any extent in common by members of more than one family, neither the building nor any part of it is a lodging house. —S. 23—Procedure.

Offence within the Act must be prosecuted under the authority of Deputy Commissioner but not other offences.

A village headman is protected by S. 28 of the Village Act to this extent that he cannot be prosecuted for an act or omission punishable under S. 10 of the Act or for an abuse of his power similarly punishable, even though such act or omission or such abuse of power is punishable under the Indian Penal Code or some other law, unless the prosecution is instituted by order of or under authority from, the Deputy Commissioner. The village headman has no power to cause hurt to or insult another person and there appears to be no reason why a Magistrate should not enquire into the charges brought against the headman under Ss. 323 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code. 1 L. —S. 622—Interpretation.

—Non-compliance with requisition for carrying out improvements—Obstruction by some tenants—Onus not completely absolved.

It would be unreasonable to construe S. 622 (3) in the sense that an owner, who has not complied with a requisition at all is discharged from liability, merely because the occupier of a portion of the land has rendered compliance impracticable only in part. Upon a fair interpretation of S. 622, it appears that the owner is discharged from liability only to the extent that compliance is rendered impossible by the conduct of the occupier. The pendency of a suit in ejectment against the tenant or the existence of an injunction against the owner of the premises restraining him from taking possession of the premises or even the mere filing of an application under S. 527 would not be sufficient to relieve the owner from a liability for a conviction for non-compliance with a notice under S. 271 requiring him to erect privies connected with the premises. CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL ACT (1923), S. 363.

1st April, 1924, when the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923 came into force, there was, after the passing of the latter Act, nobody competent to take proceedings under S. 449 of the Act of 1899. —S. 363—Burden of proof.

—Onus of proving that work was done more than five years previously is on owner.

Under S. 363 (2), the question before the Magistrate is not whether the Corporation has shown the date of the work being done or that the date was within five years of the institution of the proceedings but whether the owner has established to his satisfaction that the work has been done more than five years previously. —S. 363—Necessity for privacy.

—However necessary for privacy, it is breach of S. 363 to erect boundary walls 18 feet high without sanction—Magistrate's discretion ordering demolition held rightly exercised.

A person without sanction and in defiance of the Calcutta Municipal Act and rules of the Corporation erected a boundary wall 18 feet high though under law he was limited to a height of 10 feet and the Magistrate ordered demolition. It was admitted that the walls were necessary for securing privacy of the premises.

Held, (Per Buckland and Graham, J.J.), that there was breach of S. 363 read with S. 3 (7) and the order of demolition by the Magistrate was valid and legal and the discretion was rightly exercised. (Per Suhrawardy, J., contra.) The Magistrate should not as a course of equity order demolition and that Magistrate did not exercise proper discretion when he took into account simply the fact that the structure was put up without the sanction of the Corporation. One of the grounds on which such an order can be passed is that the erection has not been commenced after obtaining the permission of the Corporation, but the section makes it discretionary with the Magistrate to make such an order and it has been interpreted by the Court that the discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section should be exercised on equitable ground. 33 Cal. 287; 34 Cal. 341, Foll. The accused set up a flour mill intending to work it by electricity without the previous written permission of the Corporation and was convicted under S. 385, Cl. (1) read with S. 488, Cl. (1), and was sentenced to pay a fine on 30th March, 1927. After the said conviction, he worked the mill from 1st April onwards. For this he was prosecuted for having committed an offence under S. 385, Cl. (1) read with S. 488, Cl. (2), and was sentenced to pay a daily fine of Rs. 10.

Held, that once the mill has begun to work with electricity, etc., the thing passes beyond the range of intention and it cannot be said to be a continuance of the same offence, but must be regarded as a new offence altogether and the conviction is bad in law and must be set aside. An accused was found by a Food Inspector unloading a consignment at a railway station. One of the tins which the accused said, contained ghee, appeared to the Food Inspector to contain something else. He accordingly seized the consignment and took it to the Municipal Office. Thereafter he purchased for a sum of four annas a sample of one of the tins for analysis and the analysis, when made, disclosed the fact that the ghee was grossly adulterated. A prosecution had been sanctioned by the General Committee under S. 449 of the old Act (III B. C. of 1899), but the case was actually started under the new Act (III B. C. of 1923) by the new Corporation and notice upon the party was issued and an order of demolition was passed.

Held, that whether the proceedings were under S. 363 or 364 of Act III, B.C. of 1923, they were irregular and the order of the Municipal Magistrate was not justified as the party had not been heard by the Corporation before sanction for prosecution was given.

Held, further that the proceedings under S. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899) could only be started by the General Committee and, therefore, in respect of unauthorized structures which existed before 1st April, 1924, when the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923 came into force, there was, after the passing of the latter Act, nobody competent to take proceedings under S. 449 of the Act of 1899. —S. 557—Scope and effect.

—Effect and scope enunciated.

The effect of Cl. (4), S. 557-A is this that between August 1926 and August 1927, in a proceeding for demolition of structure under S. 363 even although five years may have expired, a legal proceeding would have been competent because the clause was intended as an extension of limit in view of the fact that legal proceedings had not been possible effectively for some considerable period prior to the amending Act. The clause does not say and it does not mean that no legal proceeding under S. 557-A is ever to be taken after the expiry of one year from August 1926. What it says is that if in the Act or any other law a legal proceeding between August 1926 and August 1927 would have been barred it is not to be barred until August 1927. Such a clause at no time was of any use to anyone except to the Corporation, and that in a case in which it was desired to get an extension of some restrictive period of limitation imposed by some other section of the Act or some other law. The expression "reason to believe" is entirely different from the expression "cause to suspect." The police may have cause to suspect that a certain house or place is used as a common gaming house, but the officer who issues the warrant has to bring his judicial mind to bear upon the question and he can only issue the warrant contemplated under S. 46 of the Act, if in his opinion there is reason to believe that a certain house or place is used as a common gaming house. —S. 54—Scope—Interpretation.

—To uphold conviction actual physical and not potential possession of the 'thing' in some shape or form is necessary—Meaning of the terms 'possession' and 'thing' explained.

Per Mukerji, J.—The word 'possession' should be understood in a sense ejusdem generis with the words 'conveys' and 'offers and etc.' and in the sense of actual physical possession. The word 'thing' appears in the section, in Sub-S. (1) as "anything" and in Sub-S. (2) as "the thing" and must necessarily mean tangible moveable property having a corporeal existence and capable of being handled. It is the suspected thing itself in some shape or form that can form the subject-matter of a case under S. 54. If a man was in possession of stolen gold ornaments and had got it melted or converted into gold, the gold is still the thing itself in a different shape or form. If instead of having the gold in his hand he keeps it in his house or with a friend or goldsmith, the gold is still in his possession. To such a case the section will apply. If a man deposits money in a bank, or purchases a cash certificate with it, the money loses all its identity and it cannot be said that he is still in actual physical possession of the money as a tangible piece of moveable property. The cash certificate or the fixed deposit receipt may represent the money for certain purposes but it is not the money itself as a 'thing' in another shape or form of such thing. —Prosecution must show that accused had stolen goods found with him.

For the purposes of S. 54-A of the Police Act, it is obligatory on the prosecution to show that there is reason to believe that the goods had been stolen or fraudulently obtained. The mere evidence of the Police that second-hand articles of clothing were recovered from the house of the accused would hardly warrant one in saying that the articles had been stolen or fraudulently obtained. —S. 54-A—Burden of proof.

—S. 54-A is revolutionary in its provision of casting the entire burden of proof on the accused.

The provision contained in S. 54-A is revolutionary in its character, as it relieves the prosecution of its ordinary burden of proof in a criminal case, beyond what is necessary to create a reasonable suspicion, and throw the entire onus on the accused of removing that suspicion. A penal provision of this character should be strictly construed. (Buckland, J. on difference between Mukerji and Graham, J.J.) *RADHA KRISHNA v. Arrest under orders of Deputy Commissioner of Police—Persons arrested can be detained in Police custody till investigation is over, but if they cannot be released on bail they should be produced before a Magistrate without unreasonable delay.

It is not the duty of the Deputy Commissioner of Police, a Justice of the Peace, to place an offender forthwith before a Magistrate, for in the first instance there is no period mentioned in the Calcutta Police Act within which this must be done, and in the second place as a Justice of the Peace, the Deputy Commissioner is entitled to take such steps as may be necessary to complete an investigation before placing the matter before a Magistrate. A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 587, Rel. on. It is also proper that if the officer does not see his way to release the petitioners on bail, he should produce them before a Magistrate with as little delay as possible, so that the Magistrate may determine whether in the circumstances of the case the persons arrested are entitled to be enlarged on bail, and if there is any improper exercise of such power, that can be corrected by the High Court under suitable provisions of the law, such as S. 491, Cr. It was urged that the chaser had no right to pursue out of the field trespassed and the accused were entitled to a right of private defence.

Held, that notice of trespass being taken at once, the mere fact that the cattle had left the land, before they could be seized, did not deprive the owner of the field of the right of seizure conferred upon him by S. 10, and no case for private defence was proved. CATTLE TRESPASS ACT (1871), S. 22.

Although S. 10, General Clauses Act, only applies to Acts made on or after 14th January, 1897, and does not cover in terms, an Act like Cattle Trespass Act passed in 1871, the principle underlying S. 10, General Clauses Act, should be applied to complaints under Cattle Trespass Act, S. 20. —Agent authorised to file a complaint though can not give direct evidence of all circumstances.

For a complaint by an agent to be valid, it is not necessary that the agent must know all about the matter from what he has seen himself and not from what he has been told by others; that is, the agent need not be a person who is capable of giving what is called direct evidence of all the circumstances and not of a part of them only. —S. 22—Compensation.

—Compensation cannot be awarded in absence of loss and unless specifically claimed—Sentence of imprisonment under S. 22 in default of compensation is illegal.

Compensation under S. 22 cannot be allowed in the absence of loss alleged or proved. The Magistrate cannot award it arbitrarily at his own sweet will. The complainant must make a specific claim about it. Further the Magistrate can only award compensation for illegal seizure of cattle and cannot impose fine. He is also not competent under S. 22 to pass sentence of imprisonment and thus when he passes a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of compensation, the sentence is illegal. —S. 22—Grazier.

—Grazier of cattle is agent within S. 22.

A grazier is entrusted with the charge of the cattle during the period the cattle are with him for the purpose of grazing and therefore he may be presumed to be an agent of the owners of the cattle during the time the cattle are in his charge. Such an authority must be presumed from the circumstances of the case. The person personally acquainted with the circumstances can only be the person in charge of the cattle when seizure is made and therefore comes under the category of "an agent personally acquainted with the circumstances" mentioned in S. 21. # CENTRAL PROVINCES MUNICIPAL ACT (XV OF 1903).

—S. 35—Market due.

—“Market due” meaning—Unpaid lease—Money is not a tax recoverable under S. 44.

At an auction held by the Municipal Committee of Nagpur of the right to sell provisions at a certain stall in the Cotton Market near the Railway Station the applicant Yeshwant made the highest bid. He paid a portion of the amount of his bid and the sale was presumably sanctioned in due course. But before Yeshwant executed the deed required of him, the Committee broke one of the conditions of the contract and he filed a suit for damages. The Committee then applied under S. 44 to a Magistrate to recover the unpaid balance of the lease money from him by distress and sale of his moveable property.

Held, that the unpaid lease money was not a “market-due” or tax of the kind mentioned in S. 35 as it was never imposed in the manner prescribed by that section and, therefore, not recoverable by the summary procedure provided by S. 44. ## —S. 105—By-law 5 (a).

—Lease can only be terminated according to law and it does not come to end at mere will of Committee—Transfer of Property Act, S. 106.

A lease can only be terminated according to law and it does not come to an end, at the sweet will of the Committee, by passing a resolution. A Municipal Committee granted a lease of immovable property. The lease was from month to month. No 15 days' notice as required by law was given, but the Committee passed a resolution by which the lessee was to quit the land after seven days' notice. On lessee's failure to do so he was convicted for breach of the bye-law 5 (a).

Held, that the lease could only be terminated with 15 days' notice and as no such notice was given, there was no breach of the bye-law 5 (a), and the conviction was illegal. (Mohiuddin, A. J. C.) MULCHAND BALBADHAR v. MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, GONDIA.

—S. 122—Encroachment.

—Encroachment by previous owner—Present owner omitting to remove it is not guilty.

S. 122 cannot be interpreted as making punishable an omission to remove an existing encroachment not made by the accused person. The word “obstructs” in S. 122 of the Act applies to the persons who built or caused to be built the encroachment and not to the accused who originally had nothing to do with its erection. Sub-S. (2) of S. 67 read with S. 139 provides a remedy in the case of an encroachment not made by the present owner. (Prideaux, A. J. C.) CHUNILAL v. MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, ARVI.

—Breach of sub-S. (2)—Bye-laws framed under sub-S. (3) enabling Municipality to prosecute party concerned are not ultra vires.

CENTRAL PROVINCES MUNICIPALITIES ACT (1922), S. 218.

If a person who does not give notice in writing of his intention to erect or re-erect any building as required by sub-S. (2), erects or re-erects or commences to erect or re-erect the building without the sanction of the Committee which is necessary under sub-S. (1) of S. 98 of the new Act, the person can be prosecuted for not giving the notice in the manner prescribed by bye-laws framed by the Committee in exercise of the power conferred under sub-S. (3) of the said section. Such bye-laws are not ultra vires. (Kinkhede, A. J. C.) KING-EMPEROR v. SHRIBALLABH. 26 Cr. L. J. 1084=88 I. C. 28=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 393.

—S. 199—Interpretation.

—Words “every day after the first” must be interpreted as every day after first day to which conviction relates.

The words “every day after the first” must be interpreted as every day after the first to which the conviction relates. If a person has been committing a breach of a bye-law since 8th July, 1928, he can be properly fined Rs. 50 on 21st November, 1928. It is misleading S. 199 to think that he should be fined Rs. 5 only on 21st November, 1928, because he was on that date continuing the offence. (*Macnair, Off. J. ## —S. 199—Proof.

—Lawful direction by a notice lawfully issued and disobedience to such a direction must be proved.

What the prosecution has to prove under S. 199 is that a lawful direction was given to the accused by a notice lawfully issued under the powers conferred by Part 3 of the Act and that the accused disobeyed the said direction. —S. 14—Effect of resumption.

—Resumption of jagir tenure annuls all Sub-tenures—Lands on which mines sunk are excepted—Onus of proof of consent.

"Land whereon a mine has been sunk under lawful authority is expressly excepted from annulment by exception (a) of S. 14. When a jagir tenure is resumed, all sub-tenures created by the previous Jagirdars are annulled and become void, and not merely voidable. The words "grantee or any of his ancestors" clearly mean 'succeeding grantees' and under tenures, created by whichever grantee (who successively held the tenures), would be annulled on resumption. To prove consent to the under-tenure is upon him who asserts it. A grantee or any of his successors could not create an under-tenure to exceed in duration the subsistence of their own tenure. The accused was alleged to have stated that the British Raj had come to an end or at any rate was about to do so and exhorted the people to hold a Diwan and to take steps to establish an Independent State at Bagrian. After staying at Bagrian the accused went away and immediately after the departure an unlawful association was formed of which the accused's son was made the secretary. He also told the people that he had paid Rs. 2,000 towards the movement. Subsequent to the formation the Diwans were held of a political nature.

Held, on these facts that the accused's act was not covered by S. 1 or 2, as he did not contribute to the funds or assist in the management of the existing association. But that he did instigate the formation of an association which was unlawful under S. 15, cl. (2) (a) and therefore abetted its formation and as any one becoming a member of that association or contributing funds to it would be guilty of an offence under S. 17 (1), accused's act amounted to an abetment of an offence and as this abetment was of the commission of an offence by persons exceeding 10, the action came within the purview of I. P. Code, S. 117. (Broadway and Moti Sagar, J.J.) EMPEROR v. MIHAN SINGH.

—Managing an unlawful association.

An accused person does not plead to a section of a criminal statute. He pleads guilty or not guilty to the facts alleged to disclose an offence under that section. Where the charge stated that the accused was the jathadar of the Akali Dal and as such addressed meetings of the Akalis and appealed to the Sikhs to organize themselves into jathas, and he admits himself to be a jathadar of that organization, he is admitting that he is a member of an unlawful association, therefore pleading guilty to an offence under the provisions of S. 17 (1). The words "jathadar" means a person who leads or controls a jatha, and if it is proved that there was any jatha being at that time led or controlled by the accused, he would obviously be guilty of managing an unlawful association. ## —S. 17—Essentials.

—Existence of the association.

The offence of promoting or assisting in promoting a meeting of an unlawful association implies that the association is already in existence. No doubt a thing not already existing may be promoted, but the offence under the Act consists in promoting, of assisting in promoting, not an unlawful association, but a meeting of such an association and therefore the association must exist before a meeting of it can be promoted. It cannot therefore be said that a person by urging his hearers to form themselves into "jathas" promotes or assists in promoting meetings of the "jathas" when the "jathas" themselves had not come into existence. The person alleged to have promoted such meetings on behalf of an unlawful association must be proved to have authority from that association to convene the meetings. ## —S. 17—Instigation.

Exhorting the Sikhs in a meeting to enlist themselves for shahidi jathas for the purpose of going to a certain place and collecting funds for a committee which was declared as unlawful by the Government, is not an offence under S. 17 (1) and S. 17 (2) of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, but is an offence under S. 117, Penal Code, as the accused instigated people to become members of a jatha under the orders of the said committee which jatha would be an unlawful association within the meaning of S. 16. The accused was alleged to have stated that the British Raj had come to an end, at any rate was about to do so and exhorted the people to hold a Diwan and to take steps to establish an Independent State at Bargrian. After staying at Bargrian the accused went away and immediately after the departure an unlawful association was formed of which the accused's son was made the secretary. ## —S. 17—Prima facie case.

—Assisting volunteers by giving shelter.

The case against petitioners originated on a police report which was in these words: "I beg to report that Srijiut Parmanand Agarwala has been assisting the volunteers by giving them shelter in a house belonging to him in the Tejpur town. I, therefore, request that action under the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act may be taken against him." Upon this, the Deputy Commissioner ordered "Issue warrant with bail under S. 17 (2) of the Act."

Held, this report failed to make out a prima facie case in respect of the offence, described in this section with the result that the proceedings based on the report were liable to be quashed. (Walmesley and Suhrawardy, J.J.) PARMANAND AGARWALA v. EMPEROR.

—S. 17—Promoting.

—Assisting in organizing meeting.

A person who takes an active part in organising or assisting to organize a meeting must clearly be regarded as promoting or assisting to promote it. In the ordinary dictionary sense to promote an undertaking is to forward, further or encourage it and a person who takes a part in the actual management of a meeting is obviously furthering or encouraging such meeting. ## —S. 17—Scope.

Person in charge of an office—Unauthorised persons taking part in meetings.

A person who is in charge of an office is not necessarily the person who manages or assists in managing the association which owns that office.

Clause (1) of S. 17 makes it an offence not only to be a member of an unlawful association or to take part in its meetings, but also to help it in any way and it is immaterial whether the person who renders such help has been authorised to do so or whether he acts purely on his own initiative. (A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 522, Expl.)

CRIMINAL MISAPPROPRIATION.

Cl. (1) of S. 17 is obviously intended to deal with members and all other persons identifying themselves with any unlawful body of persons as defined by S. 15; and Cl. (2) of S. 17 is directed against the ring-leaders of such a body; that is, the persons who actually control or direct the activities of the association, or who organize or help to organize any of its meetings. # CRIMINAL PROCEDURE CODE (V OF 1898, as amended in 1923).

—Construction.

—Strictly in favour of the accused.

Extradition Act and Criminal Procedure Code both being penal enactments their terms must be strictly construed in favour of accused persons wherever such construction can be reasonably justified. (Mirza and Baker, J.J.) BAI AISHA, In re. 117 I. C. 321 = 31 Bom. L. R. 62 = 53 Bom. 149 = 30 Cr. L. J. 772 = A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 81.

—Evidence Act.

The Evidence Act is a separate statute dealing with an important branch of law, and its provisions are independent of the rules of procedure contained in the Criminal Procedure Code and must have full scope unless it is clearly proved that they have been repealed or altered by another statute. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Addison, J.) RANNUN v. KING-EMPEROR.

—Internal arrangement of High Court.

The internal arrangements of the High Court are dealt with by its rules and the Code does not decide what functions can be exercised by a single Judge or must be exercised by a Division Bench. Code deals with the High Court as one and the definitions of the High Court are not intended to do more than to point to the Court itself so as to distinguish it from other Courts. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose, Buckland, B. B. Ghose, and Mukerji, J.J.) GIRISH CHANDRA v. EMPEROR.

—Mandatory provisions.

There is no universal rule that disobedience of a mandatory provision in a statute has the consequence of nullification of all proceedings irrespective of any question of prejudice. Whether a mandatory provision is imperative or only directory depends upon a consideration of various circumstances, 1924 Cal. 1035, Doubtful. (Walmsley and B. B. Ghose, J.J.) U. R. T. ## —S. 1—Applicability.

Orders passed under the Upper Burma Ruby Regulations of 1887, S. 6, are within the scope of the Criminal Procedure Code, as regards appeal and revision though no provision is made in the Regulation for an appeal or revision. ## —S. 1—Complaints by Village Magistrate.

S. 1 of the Code merely means that Village Magistrates are not with reference to the proceedings before them as such Magistrates governed by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and not that they cannot complain. ## —S. 1—Police investigation.

—S. 164.

The change by amendment of 1923 is made to allow a Presidency Magistrate to record a confession in the course of a police investigation. Although S. 1 bars the application of the Code to the police it does not bar an application of the Code to a Magistrate or any Magis-

—Essentials of.

It is of the essence of a complaint that the accusation should have been made with a view to action being taken under the Code of Criminal Procedure. An express request to that effect is unnecessary, but whether a statement is made with a view to action being taken upon it as upon complaint must be determined in the light of the circumstances. —A process-server presented a report on the back of a warrant to the Civil Court that he was beaten by A when he was attaching property in its execution. Thereupon, the Civil Court reported the matter to the police who challaned A under Ss. 332 and 394, I. P. C. The Magistrate found these offences not proved, but he convicted A under S. 186.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under S. 186, as neither the report nor the police challan constituted a complaint. (Shadi Lal, C. J.) MT. DARKAN v. EMPEROR.

—S. 4—Complaint without order.

—Pending.

Where on a referred charge-sheet, the complainant put in a complaint of his own, and there was no order disposing of it but where no further action had been taken on it, the complaint was regarded as still pending. (Wallace, J.) HAMEED SAHIB v. ABDUL KHADAR.

—S. 4—Interpretation.

—Self-contained.

Sec. 4 of the C. P. Code, is an interpretation clause or section. Its legitimate function is to declare that certain words and expressions used in the Code shall, wherever permissible, not only have the meaning which is generally attached to such words and expressions but such meaning as is assigned to such words and expressions by the interpretation clause. But by no means it is intended to annex to such words or expressions every incident which may seem to be attached to them by any other Act of the Legislature. 12 Cal. 430, Ref. (*Kennedy, J. ## —S. 4—Pleader.

—Estate manager.

It is open to an accused to appoint his estate manager to appear in his stead, and plead and to other acts on his behalf in the case against him, and it is equally open to the Court to permit the estate manager to represent the accused as a pleader; but there should be clearly on record something to show that the person who represents the accused has been duly appointed by him and to show that the Court has given the requisite permission for his appearance in place of the accused. 1862 Rat. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 4—Presentation of complaint.*—S. 4—Presentation of complaint.

It is not essential that the complaint should be presented in person by the complainant and the fact that it is not so presented does not render it the less a complaint under the Code. For the purpose of vesting the Magistrate with jurisdiction to take cognizance of a case on a complaint made to him it is not essential such complaint should be presented to him by the complainant personally. 17 C. As under S. 6 certain officers have power to issue warrants of search and also of arrest, and to cause search or arrest without warrant personally, the offence under S. 4 or 5 of Bombay Act 4 of 1887 is a cognizable offence under S. 4 (1) (f), Cr. Applicability of maxims.

The words "under any law for the time being in force" in S. 4 (f) are wide enough to include an express or implied provision of any law or enactment and would cover the application of the maxims qui facit per alium facit per se (whatever a man may do of himself, he may do by another) and qui per alium facit per seipsum facit (he who does an act through another is deemed in law to do it himself) to any provision of any enactment, in order to arrive at the true intention of the enactment. —S. 4 (1) (h)—Complaint by Court.

Petitioner gave evidence in a case tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Part of his evidence was regarded as false and the Magistrate deemed it necessary to take proceedings under S. 476, C. P. Code. He accordingly drew up a complaint. This complaint he preferred in his own Court and then he transferred it to a Presidency Magistrate for disposal. This latter issued process, held an enquiry and committed the petitioner for trial. The petitioner was then tried and convicted.

Held, by Court (Rankin and Chakravarti, J.J., dissenting) that the procedure was not illegal.

Held, per Walsley, J.—The Magistrate committed nothing worse than an irregularity which may be disregarded.

Held, per Rankin, J.—The proceedings have been had throughout in defiance of the express provisions of the Code and of fundamental principles of law.

—S. 4 (1) (h)—Complaint and information differentiated.

The essential difference between a complaint and information is that a Magistrate acts on a complaint because the complainant has asked him to act, but a Magistrate acts on information on his own initiative. In the case of a complaint the Magistrate is asked to prosecute the person named as accused and he has then to decide whether he will accede to the request or not. If he does not, then he must record his reasons under S. 202 (1), and may either make an enquiry himself or direct an inquiry or investigation or dismiss the complaint under S. 203 after recording his reasons. But in the case of receiving information, the Magistrate is not asked by any one to issue process and if he does not choose to act on the information, he need not record any reason or pass any order. In the case of information there is no complainant to examine on oath. On a complaint the complainant is first examined on oath unless it has been made by a public servant acting in the discharge of his official duty. 1 C. W. N. 105; (1899) A. W. N. 201; 3 C. W. —Asking for action of Magistrate in his judicial capacity.

The mere fact that a document in writing contains an allegation that a specific offence has been committed does not necessarily constitute that document a complaint. The allegation of the specific offence must be with a view to action being taken under the Code, i.e., for the prosecution of the offender for having committed the specific offence. Besides, it must be made to the Magistrate in the judicial capacity so that he may exercise his powers of taking cognizance of that specific offence and proceed in respect of it against the person accused.

"Where, therefore, a petition clearly shows that the object of the petition is not that the particular offence should be punished, but rather the mention of the particular offence is put in with a view to illustrate the kind of conduct which the accused person is supposed to be following and against which the petitioner is seeking protection, such a petition is not a complaint. What is supermost in the mind of the petitioner is the anticipated conduct of the person whom he mentions and against that conduct he is asking the Magistrate in his executive capacity to make enquiry and protect him against a repetition of such conduct. —Wrong section of law.

The essence of the complaint is the statement of facts relied upon as constituting the offence. It is sufficient that the complainant shall state the true facts in his own language, and it is for the Magistrate to apply the law to those facts. Where a Court, while making a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, wrongly described S. 477, I. P. C., though the facts disclosed a case under S. 465, I. P. C., and it was contended that the complaint was invalid on the ground that S. 477 was not one of those sections mentioned in S. 195, Cr. P. Code.

C. but must contain a statement of the facts relied on as constituting the offence, and it is for the Magistrate to determine on these facts what offence has prima facie been committed; the nature of the charge will be determined by him. All that is necessary for him to see is that the enquiry into the charge is within his competency and that, in the case of certain offences, the complaint has been made by the proper person. —Police report—Non-cognizable offence.

Patkar, J.—The wording of S. 190 is quite general and would include even a non-cognizable offence being taken cognizance of by a Magistrate upon a report by a police officer. The report of a police officer in respect of a non-cognizable offence if it contains an allegation in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code that some person has committed an offence would amount to a complaint within the meaning of S. 4 (h). There is no Court of a District Magistrate as such within the meaning of S. 6 of the Code. A District Magistrate's Court is only a Court of Magistrate; first class, and subordinate to the Court of the Sessions Judge for the purposes of S. 195 (3). An appeal therefore, under S. 476-B lies to the Court of the Sessions Judge, from an order passed by the District Magistrate under S. 476 A and not to the High Court. —Separate trials but concurrent sentences.

In respect of three separate acts of offence there were three separate trials of the same accused, and three separate sentences of imprisonment, passed by the same Magistrate and on the same date; the Magistrate ordered in each case that the sentence was to run from the date of conviction. As a result the sentences were to run concurrently.

Held, that inasmuch as there had been three separate trials under S. 397, the sentences could only run consecutively and that S. 35 did not give the Court power to direct them to run concurrently inasmuch as S. 35 relates to sentences in cases of convictions of several offences at one trial. —S. 54—Grounds.

—'Credible and reasonable cause'—Essentials of S. 54 (7).

Per Walmsley, J.—The expressions "credible and reasonable" in cl. 7 of S. 54 must refer to the mind of the person by whom the information is received and mere assertions cannot form the material for the exercise of an independent judgment, by such person.

Per Mukerji, J.—There are two conditions necessary to satisfy the requirements of S. 54, cl. 7. The first is one which contemplates either the proof of a fact, viz., the fact of the person having been involved in the act or a reasonable complaint or credible information or a reasonable suspicion of his being concerned therein. The second is that the person is liable for such act to be apprehended or detained in custody in British India under any law relating to extradition or under the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, or otherwise. Under the first requisite, the arresting police officer has to exercise his own judgment and form his own opinion as to whether he should or should not act and to enable him to do so he must have the necessary facts before him. Under the second requisite, what is necessary is the existence of the present liability for apprehension or detention and not a future contingent liability. Such liability would be created by the issue of some sort of process under the law, though the process may not arrive and may not be available for execution. It is the duty of the police when all the conditions necessary to fulfil the requirements of S. 54, cl. 7 are present and an arrest is validly and lawfully made, to forthwith produce the arrested person before a Magistrate. —Arrest—What should justify.

The detention and arrest of members of the public are not matters of caprice, but are governed by and must be conducted upon certain rules and principles which the law clearly lays down. To arrest persons without any justification is one of the most serious encroachments upon the liberty of the subject which can well be contemplated. The fact that because a party of persons are in a certain place at a certain time it cannot be said simply from these circumstances that they are about to engage in a criminal act, and therefore there is no legal justification for the arrest of those persons by the police, and they are not guilty of rioting if they oppose their arrest. On a complaint of a limited company in Ahmedabad which charged its commission agents with breach of trust, the commission agent was arrested by C. I. D. Officer, Poona, under S. 61 of Cr. P. Code on 5th March, 1924. He produced him before the Chief Presidency Magistrate who granted the accused bail and asked him to appear in Ahmedabad Court on 16th March.

Held, that the mere statement of an investigating police officer was not sufficient for an action by the Magistrate who should have asked for the production of a warrant from Ahmedabad and who should have released the prisoner on bail, calling upon him to appear before himself when required. The precautions laid down in these sections seem to be designed to secure that within the 24 hours some Magistrate shall have seisin of what is going on and some knowledge of the nature of the charges against the accused, however incomplete the information may be. When a constable arrests a man and tells him expressly that he is doing so under a particular authority, which he claims to have, to arrest him and if such arrest is resisted, it will be for the prosecution afterwards to establish that the constable who arrested the man had power to act under the authority that he claimed to have. It is not sufficient for the prosecution afterwards to say that the constable had authority under some other provision of law. Any man who is being arrested has a right to ask the officer arresting him to show him what power he has to do so. If the arrest is under a warrant, the man arrested is entitled to ask that the warrant be shown to him to see that he is being properly arrested and when the warrant is not shown to him and the arrest is made, such an arrest will not be a legal arrest. A man is entitled to know when a constable is arresting him, under what power he is acting and if he (constable) states that he acts under certain power, which the man knows he has not got, he is entitled to object to arrest and to escape from custody when he is arrested. —S. 90—Reasons.

—Legality of warrant issued without reasons—S. 555, Cr. P. Code—Scope of.

Per Curiam—Where the warrant is good and valid on the face, of it and it is sufficient to inform the person against whom it is issued, of the reason for its issue the Magistrate is justified in issuing the warrant on the materials before him, and such a warrant would not be invalid merely by reason of the fact that the Magistrate did not record in writing on the order sheet of the case the reason for its issue which might be the same as that which he had stated in the warrant itself. 38 Cal. 789, Cons. S. 555 deals with the form of the warrant itself and nothing more, and the words of S. 555 are not intended to supersede the provisions of S. 90. The words "After recording his reasons in writing" in S. 90, are not imperative but directory. Magistrates should record their reasons specifically in writing before issuing a warrant and should not be satisfied with signing their names to warrants in the form given in the schedule.

Chatterjee, J.—The mere signing of the warrant which states that 'the Court has reason to believe,' is not sufficient compliance with the law. A warrant issued by a Court without recording its reasons in writing is an illegal process. The words "after recording its reasons in writing" show that it must be done before issuing the warrant. The Legislature had some object in making the provision. The objects are first to insure deliberation on the part of the Magistrate before issuing the warrant, and, secondly, that the person to whom the warrant is issued may know the reasons why it is issued so that such person may come before a higher Court and show that it has been wrongly issued. 36 Cal. 433, Ref. The question of inconvenience or consequences should be considered not only with reference to the person executing the process, but also with reference to the person who is to be affected by the process and for whose benefit the provision is made. In cases affecting the liberty of the subject there is weighty authority for holding, that even in matters of form, every form and every step in the process be followed with extreme precision. Dale's Case, 6 Q. It is incumbent upon the police to try to comply with the provisions of the section. —Breach of peace—Order of binding over is justified only if in the assault or hurt, breach of peace is involved.

Under S. 106 an order binding over an accused person can only be passed when in a case of causing simple hurt or assault a breach of the peace is involved. No hard and fast rules can be laid down; but in the absence of a finding that the assault which took place involved breach of the peace or public tranquillity, the Magistrate cannot merely on the ground that the parties were on bad terms bind the accused down. To justify an order for security under section 106 there must be an express finding to the effect that the act involved a breach of the peace or an evident intention of committing the same or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case. When all the previous judicial proceedings show that all the lawful acts of one party, who was merely advising his own men not to pay rent to the other party and not to allow him to trespass and remove paddy from the lands, have been provoked by the unlawful acts of the other party, there is no justification for taking proceedings against both the parties under S. 107. Effect of the act of accused.

If a person himself is likely to commit a breach of the peace he may be dealt with under S. 107. He would equally become amenable to the provisions of the section if, for any wrongful act on his part, other persons may do things which would probably occasion a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity. 11 A. I. Cr. R. 100 = A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 438.

Danger to public peace.

The mere fact that two parties had taken different sides in Municipal politics is not sufficient for an order being passed on the members of those parties under S. 107 without stating the risk or reasons which exist for thinking that there was a danger of the breach of the peace between the two parties. Breach of peace.

Mere existence of enmity between the persons of factions is no ground for instituting proceedings under S. 107 against one or both the parties. In order to bring a case within that section it must be established that a breach of the peace is imminent. (Tek Chand, J.) PARMAN RAMI v. EMPEROR.

Allegation not happening.

Where the persons against whom proceedings under S. 107 are started, were likely to commit a breach of the peace on a particular occasion and that occasion passed off without any disturbance, it cannot be inferred affecting the person against whom process is issued, and from their intention in the past that they are likely to do the same thing in future. Binding over such persons becomes in such a case unnecessary. 26 All. 190; 6 Bom. L. R. 662, Foll. 8 A. L. J. 1080, Ref. (Das, J.) MIRZA ZULFAKAR BEG v. KING-EMPEROR.

Overt act.

Where the accused is not shown to have committed any overt act, the mere expression of opinion by some witnesses that there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace and that the parties should be bound down is certainly insufficient to prove that there is really any danger of breach of the peace being committed by the accused. 1 P. Where in a case under S. 107 several persons are bound over to keep the peace, there must be individual finding showing how each person against whom order is made deserves to be so treated. —Members of a gang—Otherwise individual finding.

There is no direct prohibition against trying a number of persons under S. 107 jointly. But unless it is apparent that the various persons against whom proceedings are taken form a gang, it is highly unfair and unjust that they should be proceeded against jointly. The effect of such a proceeding is that it is unnecessarily protracted and the parties thereby prejudiced. Furthermore if by any chance such a proceeding is conducted jointly, it is essential that the case of each accused should be considered separately and individually. (20 A. 881, Foll.). When an objection as to the impropriety of the joint proceeding was taken in the first Court and when the evidence has not been taken separately against each accused but has been lumped together and when it is impossible to discover from the judgments of the trial and appellate Courts how much of the evidence was believed and how much rejected.

Certain Hindus participated in a Hindu funeral procession proceeding with music before a mosque in pursuance of an old custom. They also on another occasion were reciting Grantsaheb in their private houses quite adjoining a mosque. Proceedings were taken against them under S. 107 as it was likely to hurt the feelings of the Mahomedan community and would result in a breach of the peace.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 107—Revision.

—Trial as warrant case.

Trying a case under S. 107 as a warrant case is an irregularity vitiating the proceedings, especially where the punishment in default of security was rigorous. (Sulaiman, J.) UTTAM CHAND v. EMPEROR. 85 I. C. 46 = 5 L. R. A. Cr. 24 = 26 Cr. L. J. 430 = A. I. R. 1924 All. 695.

—Drawing up of proceeding.

If the District Magistrate thinks it necessary in order to prevent a breach of the peace to take proceedings under S. 107, Cr. P. Code he should himself draw up such proceedings and he might then transfer the case to a Subordinate Magistrate for hearing. But he should not direct proceedings to be drawn up by a Subordinate Magistrate nor should the Subordinate Magistrate draw up proceedings merely because the District Magistrate has ordered him to do so. (Newbould and Suhrawardy, J.J.) HANIF SHEIK v. JABANI MANDAL. 72 I. C. 367 = 24 Cr. L. J. 367 = A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 540.

—Rejection of application.

If a Magistrate is satisfied after making an enquiry himself or through some other agency that the apprehension of a breach of the peace complained of does not exist he need not make an order under S. 112 of the Code and must refuse the application. (Zafar Ali, J.) SHAMS-UD-DIN v. RAM DAYAL SINGH. 76 I. C. 25 = 25 Cr. L. J. 89 = A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 630.

—S. 107—Reference.

—The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to make reference in a proceeding under S. 107, even before the applicants have submitted the proceedings to the District Magistrate under S. 125 of the Code. (40 All. 140, Not foll.; 39 All. 469, Appr. and Foll.) The jurisdiction of the District Magistrate under S. 125 of the Code is neither appellate nor revisional. The Code has allowed an appeal expressly against an order of a Subordinate Magistrate directing a party to give security for good behaviour. As no such appeal is allowed in a case where security is ordered for keeping the peace, the District Magistrate's power is merely confined to examining the record to satisfy himself whether it was any longer necessary to keep the parties under the bond. The act is not a judicial act which the District Magistrate is called upon to exercise. (Dalal, A. J. C.) EMPEROR v. BALWANT SINGH. 73 I. C. 504 = 24 Cr. L. J. 616 = A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 241.

—S. 107—Revision.

—Should be within 30 days of the order.

Persons who come to High Court in revision against an order under S. 107 are expected to do so with the utmost promptitude and certainty within thirty days of the order against which they complain. (Daniels, J.) RAM DEO SINGH v. EMPEROR. 49 All. 228 = 25 A. L. J. 44 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1132 = 7 L. R. A. Cr. 174 = 97 I. C. 652 = A. I. R. 1926 All. 767.

—Refusal to take action.

An order refusing to take action under Section 107 cannot be reversed by the Sessions Judge nor can he direct the Magistrate to draw up proceedings under the section. (Greaves and Pantou, J.J.) PHANI BHUSAN ROY v. KUNGA BEHARI BISWAS. 81 I. C. 167 = 25 Cr. L. J. 679 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 262.

—Right to worship.

The right to perform the puja of an idol or to have a share of the offerings made to the idol cannot be said to be a right of user of any land as provided in S. 145. If there is such a dispute between the parties which the Magistrate considers may lead to any breach of the peace he may take such steps as he considers necessary under S. 107. (*Walsley and B. B. —Costs.

S. 545 of the Cr. P. Code does not apply to a case under S. 107; consequently an order directing the accused to pay costs of the complainant is ultra vires. (Sulaiman, J.) SHEO PRASAD v. MAHANJOO NANIA.

—S. 107—Security.*—Surety considerations.

In proceedings under S. 107 the amount of the surety bonds was small and there was no question that the persons offered as sureties were financially sound for the amounts of the bonds and that they were of respectable station in life. —Persons brought under arrest—'Concealment'—Meaning of.

The application of clause (a) cannot be limited only to cases where a person has not been brought under arrest, nor is it necessary in all cases to prove that the accused has followed a continuous course of conduct in taking precautions to conceal his presence. 22 C. W. N. 163 and 41 C. L. J. 142, Diss. from.

A person, whether he be of good or bad character, who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach cannot be said to come within the mischief aimed at in Cl. (a).

It is certainly undesirable to lay down any general principles as to the conditions which would bring a case within the purview of the clause, for the circumstances which may arise are so multiple and various, but there must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise or otherwise, indicating a desire to hide the fact that the accused is present within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The clause is one which should be used with proper discretion and was never intended to apply to a person merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place which is open to the public. —S. 109—Essentials.*—Mere concealment.

Cl. (a) of S. 109 refers to a continuous act and does not apply to a case where there is a momentary effort at concealment to avoid detection or arrest. Passing under a false name or taking precautions to conceal one's presence or identity at a place amounting to a continuous course of conduct is what is meant by the clause. Moreover, such precautions for the purpose of concealment must be taken with a view to commit offence.

Accused was loitering on a certain road at 3 A. M. and caught by a constable as he attempted to conceal himself. Accused was an old offender.

Held, that a mere attempt at concealment on the approach of a constable was nothing and an old offender could not be expected to face a constable if found at that hour of the night. The attempt to conceal himself to avoid observation did not bring the accused within the mischief of the section (39 Cal. 456, Foll.) (Cuming and Mukerjee, J.J.) SHEIKH PIRU v. EMPEROR.

—Where the accused persons give correct names and addresses when questioned by the police, the mere fact that they did not give satisfactory account of what they were doing at the time of arrest cannot justify action under S. 109. —The only evidence against the accused was that he was seen coming out of a sugar-cane field at 10 p.m. by two persons who challenged him. He tried to run away, but was caught by them. It was found that he was a resident of a village near the place where he was arrested.

Held, that on these facts he cannot be ordered to be bound over under S. 109. (Sulaiman, Ag. C. J. Boys, Banerji, Kendall and Weir, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BISHRAMBHAR. 111 I. C. 448=26 A. L. J. 896=

—High Courts are reluctant to place restrictions upon the discretion of a Magistrate in administering S. 109, but the statutory provisions of the section are so stringent that it may be made an engine of oppression unless care is taken by Magistrates to prevent its abuse. The object of the section is to enable Magistrates to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdiction. Merely to be penniless or out of work is not an offence. If a person is unable to prove the source of his livelihood he ought not to be ordered to execute a bond under Ss. 109 and 118 unless there is reasonable ground for suspecting that he is sustaining himself by dishonest means, for such an order can be made only where it is necessary for keeping peace or good behaviour.

In such a case the prosecution must satisfy the Magistrate that suspicion that he is living dishonestly attaches to the accused because of his failure to give a satisfactory explanation when called upon to account for his —Satisfactory account.

The whole object of the latter part of cl. (b) is to enable the Magistrate to take action against suspicious strangers lurking within their jurisdiction. The expression "give a satisfactory account of himself" does not mean that the person should satisfy the Magistrate how he spends his time, but it means that he has satisfactorily accounted for his presence within the limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. It means that if a person is present within such limits or is present at a place within such limits, to which place he does not belong, and there are circumstances justifying a suspicion that he is there not for an innocent purpose, he has got to explain his presence.

Where the accused's explanation was that he came to the city in question about a month and a half before and that he worked as a cooly but had no fixed abode.

Held: that if true it was a satisfactory explanation as to his presence and the accused must be taken to have given a satisfactory account of himself. A finding that the accused has no work and no place to live in did not mean that the accused had not come to the city as he stated to work as a cooly or that he did not work as such at any time within the period, but was in the city for some ulterior object (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.) SHEIKH PIRU v. —Give a satisfactory account.

Per Full Bench.—If the words "give a satisfactory account of himself" are given the meaning "explain what he was doing" or "explain his conduct" at any particular time or place it would make the scope of S. 109 (b) too wide. The legislature did not contemplate such an extension of its scope. The expression is somewhat akin to the other expression used in the same clause, namely "who has no ostensible means of subsistence." If a man is unable to explain his course of conduct, as distinct from failure to explain a momentary behaviour, he may very well come under the clause, but a man's failure to explain his presence does not bring him within the section. 8 A.L.J. 1097; 17 A.L.J. 432; and 17 A. —Concealment to be effected at a certain place.

If a person is concealing his presence in a part of the territorial limits of the jurisdiction he is necessarily concealing his presence within that jurisdiction also. Therefore if a man is taking precautions anywhere in order to conceal his presence, and that concealing is to be effected within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate who receives the information, such Magistrate has power to demand security even though the residence of the person informed against within the jurisdiction is well-known. 49 All. 240; A. Sub-section (a) cannot be interpreted too literally so as to necessitate the continuance of taking precautions till the information is received by the Magistrate. No time limit can be put on the taking of precautions. In every case it would be a question of fact whether the circumstances justify the inference that he has been taking precautions to conceal his presence and that there was the intention to commit an offence. 27 Cr. The testimony of police officer that a person is by habit a thief is inadmissible in evidence against a person against whom proceedings are instituted under S. 110 when such evidence is only a matter of opinion and hearsay. This fact, however, is not sufficient to set aside the order passed against him under S. 110 when the latest incident is coupled with two previous convictions on charges of his belonging to, and associated with, a gang of habitual thieves and robbers, 43 Mad. 450, Rel. on. —Evidence of Reputation—Specific crimes but not evidence to bring home guilt to accused.

In a case under S. 110, the Court is not considering whether the accused person has or has not committed a specific offence but whether his general reputation is such that security should be taken for his good behaviour. When evidence is taken as to reputation of bad behaviour the Court cannot and should not exclude the reasons which induced the members of the community to form a bad opinion of the accused person, and if their opinion is based, wholly or partly on the belief that the accused person committed a crime which has not been brought home to him the Court cannot rule out as inadmissible all evidence on which the belief of the witness is based. Hence instances of specific crimes are admissible in evidence in these proceedings although they are not supported by evidence of such amount and value as would secure a conviction for the substantive offence. —Repudiation—Nature and character of.

A witness should not be allowed to state merely that an accused person is a "bad character" if he does not explain more precisely what he means by that expression. But when a witness starts by saying that a person is a "bad character" and immediately follows this up by saying that the person habitually commits theft, then there is no ambiguity about his meaning and his deposition is then relevant and admissible as evidence of general repute. —Previous convictions.

The existence of a number of previous convictions of offences such as theft is a matter which may and should be taken into consideration as indicating the character and disposition of the accused. (Boys and Sen, JJ.) EMPEROR v. RAM LAL.

—Suspicion—General repute.

There are only two kinds of evidence which are properly admissible. Ordinarily speaking the case will be governed by exactly the same rules of evidence as govern any other cases. (1) A witness cannot say what he suspects. If the prosecution knows that the witness does suspect the accused of having taken part in a theft, the prosecution can question that witness before he is put into the witness box and ask him what are his reasons for suspecting the accused. They can themselves ascertain from the witness that facts are within his knowledge, and then put him into the witness-box to give evidence as to those facts, and it will be for the Magistrate to determine whether those facts alone as supported by other evidence create such a conviction in his mind as to justify calling for security. But a witness's 'suspicions' and his 'allegations' that the accused is a thief, etc. are worth nothing and should not be admitted. (2) In addition to this, the witness may be asked about his special means of knowledge as to the reputation of the accused. (Boys and Sen, JJ.) EMPEROR v. RAMLAL. 161 I. C. 25 =

—Suspicion.

The evidence that a person was suspected of having committed murders is not a class of evidence which is admissible for the purpose of binding over that person under S. 110. 11 A. L. J. 461, Rel. on. (Banerji, J.) DIN DAYAL v. EMPEROR. 99 I. C. 46 =

—Weight of evidence

The mere fact that some of the witnesses are persons who have had commercial dealings with the appellants, and others are persons of the same class and position as the appellant, is not a sufficient ground to exclude their evidence in a case under S. 110 (Fforde, J.) SOHNA v. EMPEROR. 97 I. C. 43 =

7 A. I. Cr. R. 159 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1067.

—Evidence of substantive offence.

Evidence going to show that a substantive offence had been committed, or evidence which might possibly form the basis of a charge of a substantive offence need not necessarily be excluded in proceedings under S. 110 and can form the basis of an order under S. 112 and a finding under S. 118. —Acquittal of a particular charge.

The fact that the accused person has been acquitted of a particular charge may diminish in many cases, and may even destroy wholly, the value of the evidence as to the allegations made against the accused in the case in which he was acquitted, but does not render it inadmissible. (Boys and Banerji, J.J.) BUDHAN v. EMPEROR. 88 I. C. 362 = 47 All. 733 =

—When the charge against the accused is that of being a habitual robber, the facts that the accused gathered bad characters at his house does not go far enough to be in itself relevant. —Opinion.

If a witness is asked what the man's character is, and he were to say that in the general opinion of the man's neighbours the man is an habitual thief, that statement is 'evidence of general repute' and if he were to say that he did not know what the neighbours in general thought of the man, but his opinion was that the man was an habitual thief, that also would be admissible as evidence of the man's character. Evidence of what is generally said of a man by his neighbours is a direct evidence of the fact in issue. 5 O. C. 203 and 10 O. C. 132, Foll. Admissibility of a witness's answer depends upon the substance of it, not upon its form. The real test is whether the answer shows what is the general reputation of the man in question, and the opinion given by the witness need not be the opinion of the entire community but it must at least give the opinion of a considerable number of persons and not be merely a 'repetition' of what one or two persons have said to the

—It is not an absolute rule of law that the repute under S. 110 should only be proved by immediate neighbours. The meaning of the word 'place' necessarily varies with the circumstances of the case. But where the witnesses are living at a considerable distance from the accused the Court should satisfy itself that the evidence is true. Evidence of witnesses sufficiently near is admissible. —S. 110—Appeal.*—Retrial.

An order of retrial can be passed only in cases of appeal against a conviction. In an appeal from any other order the appellate Court can only alter or reverse such an order. A District Magistrate, therefore while setting aside, on appeal, an order requiring a person to furnish security under S. 110, cannot remand the case for a de novo trial, i.e., for fresh enquiry. But the existence of such convictions is not by itself sufficient to justify ordering the accused to furnish security. Weight must be given to a consideration of the period that has elapsed subsequent to the last of two convictions in order to see whether during that period the accused has apparently shown a disposition to conduct himself properly or whether there are indications that he has during that period continued in his previous course, though he may not have actually brought himself within the clutches of the law. Should not be used as a weapon in case substantive offence failing.

In cases where proceedings under S. 110 follow soon after a discharge or an acquittal, the Court, before passing an order binding over the person proceeded against, must be satisfied that the proceeding under S. 110 was not instituted with a view to get him punished when the police had failed to secure his conviction for a substantive offence and, as such in such cases the Courts are called upon to scrutinise the evidence with the greatest care. —S. 110—General reputation.*—Tangible facts.

The object of S. 110 is to offer protection to the members of the public and is not intended to be an engine of oppression. The Courts below have got, in all cases coming up either under Ss. 108, 109 or 110, to pay strict regard to the question whether the evidence produced is legal evidence in the case on the question of repute. Nothing is more easy than to put forward a general charge against a certain person that he is a burglar and thief. The said statement has got to be tested in the light of tangible facts and particulars, if there are any such facts to support the story. If there are no such facts, the evidence loses its value (Young and Sen, J.J.) EMPEROR v. KUDUA BARI 121 I. C. 559=

—In a case under S. 110, Cr. P. Code, the Court is not considering whether the accused person has or has not committed a specific offence but whether his general reputation is such that security should be taken for his good behaviour. When evidence is taken as to reputation of bad behaviour, the Court cannot and should not exclude the reasons which induced the members of the community to form a bad opinion of the accused person and if their opinion is based wholly or partly on the belief that the accused person committed a crime which had not been brought home, the court cannot rule out as inadmissible all evidence on which the belief of the witness is based. Meaning of general reputation indicated. (Hasan, C.J. and Pullan, J.) JAI SINGH v. EMPEROR. 6 Luck 36=I. R. 1930 Oudh 373=

—Testing of evidence.

The mere production of a string of witnesses, who say that an accused person's general repute is so and so, can carry very little weight unless some attempt has been made to show that he is a person in a position to know the general repute, and there has been some reasonable attempt by the counsel for the accused or by the Court to check the value of the evidence. (Boys and Sen, J.J.) EMPEROR v. RAM LAL. 116 I. C. 25=51 All. 663=1929 A.L.J. 361=10 L.R.A. Cr. 66=11 A. I. Cr. R. 486=30 Cr. L. J. 562=A. I. R. 1929 All. 273.

—Evidence as to,

A witness can come into Court and say "This man is by general repute an habitual thief." Whether this evidence is worth anything will depend upon his position, his partiality or impartiality and whether the defence have by cross-examination been able to show that the witness has no real grounds for saying that he has knowledge of the general reputation of the man in the dock. Such evidence of general repute does not offend against the rule against hearsay evidence. This is not hearsay. It is direct evidence given on the basis of the witness's own knowledge of a fact, the fact that people are talking about this man in a certain way, the fact that he has such a general reputation. The general reputation of a man is that which he bears among his fellow-townsmen and mere suspicion of complicity in this or that offence is not evidence of general reputation. A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 49, Foll. (Addison, J.) GHULAM MAHOMMAD v. EMPEROR.

—Nature of evidence.

In absence of strong evidence of repute which is of universal kind, order under S. 110 should not be passed. Evidence of an avowed enemy cannot be worth very much. (Scott-Smith, J.) WALI MUHAMMAD KHAN v. EMPEROR. 25 Cr. L. J. 808=81 I. C. 344=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 166.

—S. 110—Habitual offender.*—Previous order under S. 110, Cr.P. Code

The fact that a person has been bound over previously under S. 110, may be stated and proved as one of the grounds on which the witnesses to general repute believe the accused to be a habitual offender. The value to be attached to the proof of a previous order under S. 110, is, of course, a question for the Court to consider. (Ashworth, and King, J.J.) EMPEROR v. KUMERA. 51 All. 275=1929 Cr. C. 346=125 I.C. 19=31 Cr. L. J. 755=A. I. R. 1929 All. 650.

—Who is.

Habit has to be proved by an aggregate of facts and it would be straining the provisions of S. 110, if it were to be held that a man being suspected mainly by the police in four thefts after he had been acquitted on a charge of theft amounted to sufficient evidence of habit. (Broadway, J.) RAHMAN v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 510=10 A.I.Cr.R. 355=10 L.L.J. 317=29 Cr.L.J. 574.

—Meaning of.

The word "habit" implies a tendency or capacity resulting from the frequent repetition of the same acts. The words "by habit" and "habitually" imply frequent practice or use. The words have been used in S. 110 in the sense of depravity of character as evidenced by the frequent repetition or commission of offences mentioned —Dangerous to society.

Where certain persons have executed an agreement between themselves and rightly or wrongly they believe that the agreement is a valid agreement and if in enforcing the same in an improper way they commit offences, they cannot be said to have acquired the habit of committing those offences or that they were habitually offenders so as to bring them within the purview of Cls. (a) to (e) of S. 110. But where the course of their conduct shows that they have become desperate and dangerous and therefore it is not safe to let them wander about at large, they can be bound down to be of good behaviour under Cl. (f). (Jwala Prasad, J.) BHUBANESHWAR KUAR v. KING-EMPEROR. 6 Pat. 1=28 Cr. L.J. 359=100 I. C. 967=8 P.L.T. 335=A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 126.

—Guilty of substantive offence.

Sec. 110 does not provide for any person being called upon to furnish security on the ground that he was by habit a dacoit and belonged to a gang of dacoits. Being a member of a gang of dacoits is a definite offence defined and punishable under the Penal Code and it cannot be permitted that instead of the specific charge being tried in a proper Court on a proper evidence, the person should be indirectly punished by proceedings under the preventive sections. (Mukerji, J.) RAM PRASAD v. EMPEROR. 23 A.L.J. 18=26 Cr. L.J. 746=6 L. R. A. Cr. 45=86 I. C. 282=A.I.R. 1925 All. 250.

—Meaning of.

The word "habit" means persistence in doing an act, a fact which is capable of proof by adducing evidence of the commission of a number of similar acts. "Habitually" must be taken to mean repeatedly or persistently. (Kotval, A.J.C.) LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. HANMANT RAO. 75 I. C. 764=25 Cr. L. J. 60=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 19.

—S. 110—Insufficient evidence.

—Belief of prosecution witnesses of accused being man of desperate and dangerous character based upon suspicion that accused committed crime and certain acts of oppression—But Court holding suspicion not proved and acts of violence only youthful frolics—Many other persons including accused's tenants deposing to his being peaceful citizen and good landlord—Court should not demand security. —S. 110 provides six categories of cases within one or more of which the offender's case must come in order that a penalty may be imposed in accordance with that section. When a person is sought to be proceeded against under this section it must be made clear as to which sub-section he is charged. It is not enough merely to assert that he is a person of criminal tendencies or that he is suspected of having committed certain crimes or to charge him generally with having committed an offence under S. 110. Moreover, the evidence must prove the accused person to come within one or more of the descriptions set out in the section. General evidence of the accused's bad character and of his association with people of bad character does not bring his case within the provisions of S. 110. Evidence of general ill-repute is not sufficient to base an order under S. 110, nor can the accused person be condemned upon suspicion. (Fforde, J.) SOHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR

—Private knowledge of Magistrate.

Private knowledge of a Magistrate is not in itself substantive evidence which may be used against the accused, but it is a form of check which the trial Court may legitimately use in order to test the nature of the evidence with which it has to deal, and to negative, for example, a suggestion that the police investigation has been unfair. A finding for example that "inquiries about the accused satisfy me that he is a badmash," would be objectionable, but "the result of my inquiries in the neighbourhood, so far as they appear in the case of this accused tend to show that the case against him has not been got up without reason," would be quite legitimate. 23 All. 596, Expl. —Offence for which accused was not charged.

Evidence showing that the applicant took part in a dacoity, that he was actually arrested in connection with the dacoity but the police considered the evidence against him of so little value that he was released under S. 169 of Cr. P. C. without even being placed before the Court, is totally insufficient for binding the accused over on a charge of being a bad character. (Daniels, J.) JHANDOO SINGH v. KING-EMPEROR. 75 I. —Vague.

Where the only evidence against the applicant was that the applicant was a thief and the neighbourhood believed in such a rumour, but there was no evidence as to who the applicant's associates were, what were his means of subsistence or whether increase of thefts synchronised with his appearance in any particular locality.

—Instances of mere suspicion are not sufficient in order to bind down a person to be of good behaviour under S. 110. The evidence in such a case must be evidence by which the petitioner is proved to have been concerned or some direct evidence to establish the complicity of the petitioner in such cases. The evidence ought to be of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable and definite ground for coming to the conclusion that the petitioner is a habitual offender. (Kulwant Sahay, J.) SHAIKH AMJAD ALI v. Joint trial must be condemned as prejudicial to the accused, where proceedings are taken against the accused not only for conduct coming within S. 110, Cls. (d) and (e) but also under Cl. (f) for the reason that they are so desperate and dangerous as to make their being at large without security hazardous to the community, and where the accused are tried jointly and evidence pertaining exclusively to the nefarious acts of each of the accused is let in addition to the evidence as to the events in which it is alleged that they are associated together and the Magistrate passes an order against them on a consideration of the entire evidence thus introduced into the record against all the accused. under S. 112 of the Code. There must be something in the nature of an indictment or charge containing substantial particulars indicating the grounds upon which the police have given information to the Magistrate. Accused were arrested as suspected habitual thieves. The Magistrate fixed a date for the production of evidence with the object of issuing a notice under S. 112. On the date fixed, after hearing prosecution evidence, he at once called upon the accused to enter upon their defence to a charge under S. 110, held, the procedure was bad and the proceedings must be set aside. It is only after the Magistrate has made the order required by S. 112 which is really a notice in writing that the actual hearing under S. 110 can by law take place at all. (Walsh, J.) RAJ RANSI v. When the stage is reached of asking the accused whether he wishes to plead guilty or to defend, the accused must be allowed an opportunity of cross-examining any witnesses whom he desires to cross-examine. ## —What the notice should contain—Meagre information.

It is not necessary to state more than will show the person against whom proceedings are taken the particular sub-section on which the Court proposes to proceed against him. The order need not show the nature of the case against him. If, for example, a Magistrate receives information from a police-officer, that a certain person is an habitual thief, the Magistrate has a right to proceed to the next stage and issue a notice to him. He may be unwise in taking such action without carefully checking that information; but he has a legal right to take such an action; and if his information is meagre, the substance of his information would be meagre. Nevertheless, it is sufficient for him to state it to make an order under S. 112 legal. If he has taken action on insufficient information, the proceedings may, on the evidence, be found to have been without justification; no ill-results will follow from the adoption of this view, and irregularity, if any, is curable under S. 537. —Enquiry.

In principle there is no distinction between trials under S. 107 and trials under S. 110. In either case it is the duty of the Magistrate to hold an enquiry of the offence and not to bind an accused person merely because he agrees to furnish security. 37 All. 30; 54 I. C. 411 and 54 I. —Issue of warrant.

A Magistrate holding an inquiry under S. 110 derives jurisdiction to issue a warrant against a suspect only after he has passed an order under S. 112, and after he has satisfied himself that there is reason to fear the commission of a breach of the peace, and such breach of peace cannot be prevented otherwise than by the immediate arrest of the suspect. —Reasons for arrest.

If it is intended that the police-officer should arrest a man with a view of taking proceedings under S. 110, it is strictly and specially necessary that he should specify one of the clauses given in S. 55, although it may be for the cause so stated that he intends to proceed under S. 110. —Local enquiry.

Though local inquiry is most appropriate where proceedings under S. 110 shall be instituted it is entirely out of place when the accused are brought before the Court. Once the accused are before the Court the case must be decided on the evidence alone. But where the Magistrate merely used his enquiries to confirm the result at which he had arrived on a consideration of the evidence.

—First order and finding.

Magistrate ought to do their best to see that the first order does actually contain the substance of the information received by them, no less and no more. The next thing is that the finding on enquiry should conform to the first order which in its turn should conform to the information received by the Magistrate. Deviation from this procedure is likely to gravely prejudice the position of the accused and the order passed against him calling on him to furnish security will be set aside if such prejudice has occurred. —S. 110—Revision.*—Considerations by High Court.

The High Court is not a Court of appeal in cases under S. 110, and if it is satisfied that the Courts below have approached the consideration of the evidence in a fair way having regard to the interests not only of the prosecution but also of the accused, it is not called upon in revisions against orders passed under S. 110 to weigh the evidence given on behalf of one side or the other. A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 26, Foll. But at the same time before affirming an order demanding security, High Court is to be satisfied that the evidence in the case was of a character which made it imperative in the interests of public security to pass an order under S. 118. —Ss. 112 and 115 not complied with.

An order passed against an accused in the proceedings under S. 110 cannot be set aside by High Court on the ground that the provisions of Ss. 112 and 115 were not strictly complied with, where it appears that the accused is sufficiently informed as to the allegation against him. —Fair consideration of the case.

The High Court is not a Court of appeal in cases under S. 110 and the duty of the High Court is not to weigh the evidence given, on behalf of one side or the other, but only to see whether the Court below had approached the consideration of the case in a fair way, having regard to the interest not only of the prosecution but also of the accused. 13 A. —What prosecution evidence should be.

Although it is very difficult in revision to interfere in cases under S. 110 still the Court must be satisfied that the prosecution evidence is of such a character that it will reasonably support the inference that it is necessary in the interest of public security to send the person to prison or bind him down. —Considerations which will induce the High Court to quash the order.

The High Court is not in criminal cases a Court of appeal, but it is its duty to endeavour to weigh the evidence and to see whether the case has been fairly considered from the point of view of the defendant. Secondly, if the evidence for the defence is equally good as that for the prosecution, the High Court may quash the order in revision. Thirdly, witnesses, who voluntarily come forward whether as friends or associates of the accused to give them a good character, must not be brushed aside, unless they are discredited as regards their good faith and honesty, just as witnesses in any other proceeding must be discredited before they are rejected by the tribunal. Fourthly, evidence of general repute by persons who have no personal knowledge of the accused and know nothing of his business and circumstances, is not sufficient to justify an order and lastly vague repetition unaccompanied by direct evidence personally affecting each accused person or accompanied by direct evidence which breaks down, is not sufficient in itself to justify an order. Whether the statement of the accused “I am prepared to give security for good behaviour” is in effect equivalent to a plea of guilty, can be decided upon an examination of the particular facts. Even when the accused is represented by a mukhtar, it is undesirable that, where persons are arrested under S. 55, they should not be told the substance of the information against them. ## —S. 117—Evidence.

—General repute—Hearsay.

The fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute or otherwise. That evidence of general repute must necessarily consist largely of "hearsay" evidence. The reputation of a person means what is generally said or believed about his character. A witness may depose "I believe the accused to be a habitual thief, and that is what persons of the neighbourhood generally say about him." Such evidence is admissible as evidence of general repute. So far as the witness gives the opinions or the statements of other persons his evidence must, in a sense, be "hearsay." (Ashworth and King, J.J.) EMPEROR v. KUMERA. 125 I. C. 19=31 Cr. L. J. 755=51 All. 275=1929 Cr. C. 346=A. I. R. 1929 All. 650.

—Suspicion—Opinion of witness.
It is open to question, whether evidence that the accused has been suspected by persons other than the witness is inadmissible for all purposes in an inquiry under S. 117. It has no doubt been held in several cases that evidence of cases in which the accused is suspected is not evidence of general repute within the meaning of S. 117, but it does not necessarily follow that such evidence is not admissible for other purposes. When a witness gives evidence of general repute he is undoubtedly entitled to give his personal opinion of the person concerned. As his opinion is undoubtedly relevant then the grounds of his opinion must also be relevant. The value to be attached to such evidence is another matter. (Ashworth and King, J.J.) EMPEROR v. KUMERA. 125 I. C. 19=31 Cr. L. J. 755=51 All. 275=1929 Cr. C. 346=A.I.R. 1929 All. 650.

—Witness can depose that the accused has a general reputation as an habitual thief or robber as the case may be, but he should not be allowed to state that the accused is a bad character or has the reputation of being a bad character. (Boys and Weir, J.J.) EMPEROR v. KURWA. 26 A. L. J. 519=9 L.B.A. Cr. 75=9 A.I.Cr.R. 467=30 Cr. L.J. 122=113 I. C. 282=A. I. R. 1928 All. 357.

—Further evidence.
It is not necessary for the Magistrate for passing an order under S 117 (3) to take further evidence. The only condition precedent laid down is that he must record his reasons in writing. (Kincaid, J.C. and T'yabji, A.J.C.) PIR SHAW MURAD SHAH v. EMPEROR. 20 S.L.E. 358=27 Cr.L.J. 1030=96 I.C. 982=A.I.R. 1926 Sind 276.

—Direct knowledge essential to prove repute.
Prosecution must produce evidence of persons living in the neighbourhood provided they are acquainted with the accused and are aware of the accused's reputation. The basis of the knowledge of a witness cannot be a rumour heard in the village without specifying any particular person. Such evidence is inadmissible. Witness must be able to testify from specific cases coming to their knowledge. (Kulwant Sahay, J.) RAMALAGAN v. EMPEROR. 81 I.C. 633=5 P.L.T. 166=2 Pat. L.R. (Cr.) 98=25 Cr. ## —S. 117—Intention.

—When High Court interferes with order for interim security.
S. 117 (3) has apparently been introduced for the purpose of preventing a breach of peace or disturbance of the public tranquillity or the commission of any offence or in the interest of public safety pending an enquiry under Ss. 108, 109 and 110. It is not therefore open to High Court under provisions of S. 498 to reduce the security which the Magistrate orders to be furnished. But there is nothing to prevent the High Court in exercise of its inherent powers from considering whether the interim security which is ordered to be furnished is not too high. The order of the High Court, reducing interim security does not, however, fetter the discretion of the Magistrate as to the amount of security which may ultimately be demanded. (Tapp, J.) JAGIR SINGH v. EMPEROR. I.R. 1930 Lah. 594 (2)=125 I.C. 322=1930 Cr.C. 677=31 Cr. L.J. 812=A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 529.

—"No charge need be framed."
The words "no charge need be framed" in S. 117 (2) can only mean that no occasion can arise for framing a charge because under S. 221 (1) every charge shall state the offence with which the accused is charged. In security proceedings the place of charge is taken by the "order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received" prescribed by S. 112. This order has to be read over to the person in respect of whom it is made, and although the Code does not provide that he should plead to it, it resembles a charge in that it must contain a statement in abstract of the prosecution case. —S. 117—Joint trial.
—S. 117, Cl. (5) does not make it a condition of such joint trial, that the suspects shall be shown to be associated together in the order itself. —S. 118—Appeal.*—High Court can interfere on merits of orders under S. 118, if the lower Court under S. 406 has not really gone through evidence on record.

It is true that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere on the merits of orders passed under S. 118 except in very exceptional circumstances provided that the Court under S. 406, shows in its judgment that it has really, and not merely nominally, gone through the evidence on the record, which it can do by stating clearly what it believes the evidence proves giving a short summary of that evidence, and making such criticisms as go to show that the evidence is reliable; but if the judgment does not satisfy these requirements and also fails to come up to the required standard of a legal judgment, and there is a clear misconception of such evidence as is considered, it is not only just but imperative on the High Court to see how far the judgment in appeal is, correct even on matters which it purports to decide expressly. 61 A. —Order under S. 118 is not a "conviction" or "acquittal."

The terms "conviction" and "acquittal" are nowhere applied throughout the Code to an order under S. 118 and they are, in fact, wholly inapplicable to the same. (1898) A. W. N. 127; 13 C. W. —S. 118—Inquiry.*—Inquiry under Chap. 8 is not trial—Person called upon to furnish security is not deemed to be convicted.

A proceeding under Chap. 8 is an "inquiry" which under the definition of the term excludes a trial. No doubt S. 117 applies to such inquiry, the procedure prescribed for conducting trials, and the terms and expressions which occur in a trial come to be loosely applied in an inquiry also for the sake of convenience. But actually the person in respect of whom the inquiry is held is not an accused but a quasi-accused, and he is not "deemed" to be an accused, nor when an order under S. 118 is passed against him "deemed" to be convicted within the meaning of S. 426. Held, that the procedure in recording the evidence was illegal. B's case was never tried at all and the orders passed against him under S. 189, Cr. P. Code and S. 7, Habitual Offenders Act, should be set aside. (Dalip Singh, J.) LILU v. EMPEROR.

—S. 118—Surety.

—Magistrate can accept security even after the accused has been sent to jail.

A man was ordered by a Magistrate of the first class under S. 118 to give security for his good behaviour under S. 110 for a period of three years. He failed to furnish security then and there and he accordingly was ordered to be detained in prison pending the orders of the Sessions Judge. A day or so later he offered security to the Magistrate who accepted it and he was released from jail.

Held, that the Magistrate can accept security. A reasonable view of the matter should be taken as there is nothing in the Act clearly indicating what should be done if security is offered to the Magistrate after he has referred the matter to the Sessions Judge and before the latter has heard the reference. The purpose of the security sections is not that the persons proceeded against should be sent to or kept in jail but that should only be done when they are unable to give security.

Held, further, that reference to the Sessions Judge automatically ends with the acceptance of security by the Magistrate. (Addison, J.) EMPEROR v. MUHAMMAD AKBAR. 107 I. C. 286 = 29 Cr. L. J. 236 = 9 A. I. Cr. R. 490 = A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 64.

—S. 118—Suspect in jail.

—When the suspect is in jail when the order under S. 123 is made, that order is not to be enforced after his release.

Order under S. 118 was made on 20th October and the order of imprisonment for one year in consequence of the failure of the accused to give security in pursuance of the order under S. 118 was made under S. 123 on 29th October. Between 20th October and 29th, the accused was convicted and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and that sentence commenced between these two dates.

Held, that it was clear that on the expiry of the above sentence the accused was entitled to be set at liberty. (Shah and Fawcett, J.J.) EMPEROR v. ABA FARID. 103 I. C. 108 = 29 Bom. L. R. 700 = 28 Cr. L. J. 652 = A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 657.

—When suspect is in jail, when the order under S. 123 is passed, detention runs concurrently with imprisonment for substantive offence.

If on the date of the order passed under S. 118 the suspect is undergoing imprisonment for a substantive offence, the provisions of cl. (1) of S. 120 come into operation and the period of security does not commence till the suspect has served out his substantive sentence of imprisonment. The proper procedure under the circumstances would be not to pass the order for detention of the suspect under S. 123 at once but postpone further proceedings under that section till the suspect has served out the period of sentence for the substantive offence. A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 545, Rel. on. If on the date of order under S. 118 the suspect is not undergoing imprisonment for substantive offence his case does not fall within the purview of cl. (1) of S. 120. If on that date the suspect asks for time to furnish the required security, it is open to the Magistrate to inquire whether the suspect is undergoing a trial for a substantive offence, and, if so, it is open to him to refuse to grant any time for furnishing the required security and to take immediate action under S. 123. If, however, the Magistrate does not make the necessary enquiry, or on making the necessary enquiry he does not get any definite information, and in the exercise of his discretion he grants time to the suspect to furnish security, and before the expiry of that time the suspect is convicted of a substantive offence and sentenced to imprisonment, then neither cl. (1) nor cl. (2) of S. 120 applies. In that case, the Magistrate should proceed to pass an order under S. 123 which provides for immediate detention in prison of the suspect till he furnishes the required security. This detention would ipso facto run concurrently with the substantive sentences which the suspect is undergoing. A. I. R. 1926 Sind 273, Foll. (Rupchand Bilaram and Lobo, A. J. Cs.) EMPEROR v. If the defendant denies the claim and the denial is proved, the Criminal Court holds its hand and it will be the business of the plaintiff to bring a civil suit if he likes. If he does not, the denial is maintained. If he does bring a suit and succeeds, the Magistrate may proceed to pass an order absolute under S. 140 (1). (Dalal, J.) RAZAN v. EMPEROR. 1930 A. L. —S. 139-A—Applicability.

—Omission in exercise of discretion by Magistrate in following the direction of law does not vitiate the entire proceeding.

Where a Magistrate issued a notice under S. 133 on a person to show cause why he should not remove an obstruction on a public river and the person filed a written statement, admitting the public character of the river but claiming that the obstruction was on his zamindar's khas land and not on the river and the Magistrate proceeding under S. 137 and having come to the conclusion that the obstruction was on the bed of the river, made the order absolute and passed orders for removal of the obstruction.

Held, that S. 139-A ought not to apply to such a case, but the language of the section is so general that even in such a case the Magistrate should exercise a good discretion in following the direction of the law and omission to do it does not vitiate the proceeding but is an irregularity covered by S. 537. (Sukrawardy and Graham, J.J.) RAJANI KANTA ROY v. IBRAHIM SARKAR. 57 Cal. 252=126 I. C. 205=31 Cr. L. J. 973=33 C. W. N. 748=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 507.

—The section applies only in a case where a party wants determination of the public character of the river or way obstructed. The object with which the section was enacted seems to be that where the existence of the public right is denied, the Magistrate has to make an enquiry. If it is not denied, then the section hardly seems to apply. (Sukrawardy and Graham, J.J.) RAJANI KANTA ROY v. IBRAHIM SARKAR. 57 Cal. 252=I. R. 1930 Cal. 701=126 I. C. 205=31 Cr. L. J. 973=33 C. —When the public right of way is limited the case falls under S. 139 A.

Where a right of way over an uncultivated field was in dispute between villagers and the owner closed that way on bringing the field under cultivation, relying on the revenue records which made no mention of any public path,

Held, in proceedings against the owner under S. 133, Cr. P. Code, that this case was exactly one which S. 139-A, was designed to meet. Rights of way are obviously matters to be decided by the Civil Courts. It is in the interest of public policy that Criminal Courts should not deal with matters which it is compulsory to leave to Civil Courts. (Campbell, J.) NUR ALI SHAH v. NATHA. 28 Cr. L. —A Magistrate in proceedings under S. 133 has no jurisdiction to make over the enquiry under S. 139-A to any Magistrate subordinate to him, and omission to conduct it himself is an irregularity incurable by S. 537. The reason for the above proposition is that the Magistrate has to decide upon either staying the proceedings or further proceedings under S. 137 or 138 and this decision necessitates his considering the reliability of the evidence and proper valuation of it, which he is better fitted to do if he himself undertakes it. Mere reading of the enquiry as made by a Subordinate Magistrate and acting upon it does not enable him to do this work efficiently. (Pearson and Patterson, J.J.) MASADDAR ALI v. ISIMULLA. I. —S. 139-A—Inquiry.

—What the Magistrate is required to do under S. 139-A is to ask the party required to show cause as to whether he admitted the existence of any public right. On his denying the existence of such right he has to enquire and if he is satisfied that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial he will stay proceedings. The record-of-rights is a very valuable piece of evidence which raises the presumption of correctness of the entries therein: and if it happens to be in favour of the second party the Magistrate is perfectly justified in considering it as "reliable evidence" in support of the denial. (Suhrawardy and Costello, J.J.) SATISCHANDRA SEN v. KRISHNA KUMAR DAS. 34 C. W. N. 957= 128 I. C. 810=32 Cr. L. J. 189= 1931 Cr. C. 34=A. I. R. 1931 Cal. 2.

—The Magistrate is not to see the sufficiency but reliability of evidence in support of the denial.

Where an order under S. 133 is made and the person proceeded against denies the existence of any public right, the Magistrate must first look to a finding under S. 139-A, whether there was any reliable evidence in support of such denial. Where there is any reliable evidence the Magistrate must stay proceedings. If he finds, however, that there is no such evidence he can then proceed under S. 137. It is not the duty of the Magistrate to come to a finding whether the evidence is in his opinion sufficient to support the case. All he has to see is whether there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of any public right. If there is, the Magistrate must stay his hand till the other side has gone to a Civil Court. —The Magistrate should only find whether the evidence is reliable or it stands.

Where a right of public way is denied and the person denying as well as the person complaining produce evidence, the Magistrate should take the evidence as it stands and see whether, on the face of it, he could come to the conclusion that the evidence was false and was, therefore, unreliable. It is the duty of a Magistrate to proceed in accordance with the provisions of S. 139-A without waiting for the objection to be raised by one of the parties to the proceeding. Under that section on the appearance before him of the person against whom the order is made, the Magistrate is bound to question him as to whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of the way, river, channel or place and if he does so the Magistrate shall before proceeding under S. 137 or S. 138 inquire into the matter. The Magistrate cannot refuse to inquire into the matter because the objection was not taken until a late stage of the case. (Newbould and Ghose, J.J.) SHEIKH SADIR v. SABARALI. 88 I. C. 528=29 C. —Proceedings under S. 144.

A Magistrate directed a notice to be issued under S. 144 and called upon the parties to show cause, if any. The parties showed cause, produced documents and argued upon it and the judgment was reserved. The Magistrate then examined some witnesses on the spot ex parte behind the back of the parties and without giving any notice to them of the local inspection passed an order based solely on the statements made by these witnesses without referring to documentary evidence and arguments submitted by the parties.

—The High Court has power to interfere when the order passed by the Magistrate is vitiated.

Where the elements essential to action under S. 144 are shown to exist upon materials before the Court, the High Court will in exercising its powers respect the opinion of the local authorities both as to the gravity of the danger and as to the steps necessary for the maintenance of peace. But if the grounds for action as stated in the order are either unfounded in fact or insufficient in law or if it is shown that the order against the public as framed violates the conditions laid down by S. 144 then it is the duty of the High Court to interfere in revision. —Patna High Court does not generally interfere with orders under S. 144, the operation of which has expired.

An order was passed under S. 144 restraining the petitioners from interfering with the possession of the other side. On the last day on which the order could operate, the Magistrate complained against the petitioners under S. 188, Penal Code, in respect of a breach of his above order. Held that the general practice of most of the Judges of the Patna High Court is against interfering with orders under S. 144, the operation of which has expired and the fact that the petitioner was concerned with the validity of the order in view of the prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, was not a special circumstance, for interference. 20 C. —Court must make enquiry in the circumstances likely to cause breach of peace.

Section 144 is not intended to restrict the liberty of an individual if there is no apprehension of a breach of the peace on account of any act to be done by him. Its object is to enable a Magistrate in cases of emergency to make an immediate order for the purpose of preventing an imminent breach of the peace; but it is not intended to relieve him of the duty of making a proper enquiry into the circumstance which make it likely that such breach of the peace will occur. If it is found that a man is doing that which he is legally entitled to do and that his neighbour chooses to take offence and threatened to create a disturbance in consequence, it is clear that the duty of the Magistrate is not to continue to deprive the first of the exercise of his legal right but to restrain the second from illegally interfering with that exercise of legal right. 5 Cal. 132, Foll. The interpretation of the Sessions Judge of the order directing a party not to obstruct the water by bandh is an order directing the removal of a bandh already erected is wrong.

A small river flowed by the east side of two villages K and S, whose lands were irrigated by the river. In August 1927 the people of K and certain adjoining villages raised a bandh in the bed of the river in village K, whereupon on 2nd September the tenants of S filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer denying the right of the people of K to erect a bandh and alleged that the bandh caused great damage to the crops of S and asked the Court to take action under S. 144 against the people of K directing them to remove the bandh. On 8th September the Magistrate passed the following order: "The report shows that the villagers of K have erected a new bandh at point A of this map. Issue notice S. 144. Cr. P. Code, restraining the second party from obstructing the flow of water into the canal by erecting a bandh at point A... Send a copy of the order to the police who will see that there is no breach of the peace." The people of S as also the Inspector of Police and the Sessions Judge construed the order to mean that the bandh was to be removed.

Held, that there was nothing in that order to justify the assumption that the Magistrate had given any direction to the Sub-Inspector to remove the bandh erected by the people of K. It was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass an order like this under S. 144. All that it purported to do was to restrain the people of K from obstructing the flow of water into the canal by erecting a bandh. This obviously could not apply to a bandh which had been admittedly erected before this

Where Hindus of a certain place, in accordance with a decree obtained in their favour, applied for leave to take procession along the streets and the Magistrate passed an order under S. 144, forbidding the Hindus to conduct that procession, holding that the likelihood of rioting and bloodshed was too great to allow them to exercise their lawful rights.

Held, that this was a confession of importance on the part of the authorities. The District Magistrate is the person who is to look after the peace of his district and naturally in case of sudden emergency it may be necessary to restrict a person from exercising a perfectly lawful right. But it should not be necessary to prevent that person not only in a particular occasion in the near future but for all time from exercising that right because it would be too much trouble to render him adequate protection against persons who intend to disobey the law.

Orders under S. 144 are not intended to be used as a means of depriving the citizens of lawful rights which have been declared by competent Courts. (Phillips, J.) SIVAPURAM VENKATA SUBBAYA v. When an order was passed under S. 144 which amounted to an order to cut the bandh the assembly resisting that is not unlawful.

A compromise decree to which the Secretary of State was a party was passed providing that if the work of excavation and of bunding the eastern bank of a certain stream was not completed by a certain time the injunction issued for the maintenance of the western bank would be cancelled and the respondents (that is, the plaintiffs in the suit for injunction) would raise no objection to the defendants or any other person cutting the western bandh and bunding the eastern bank after the period allowed had expired; the eastern bank was damaged and one of the defendants in the suit for injunction applied to the Collector for permission to remove the western bandh. The Collector as District Magistrate issued order under section 144 to the public generally to abstain from interfering when the western bandh was cut as conditions had arisen when it was necessary to cut the western bandh. In the result at the time of cutting the bandh a riot took place and some of the villagers who had taken part in preventing the cutting of bandh were convicted under S. 147, I. P. C. and the common unlawful object was stated to be resisting the cutting of the bandh.

Held, that in effect the order really amounted to an order to cut the bandh. The District Magistrate who in his capacity as Collector represented the Secretary of State in the civil suit and who was in effect a party thereto was taking upon himself to construe the consent decree of the Civil Court and to say that the circumstances had arisen which justified the dissolving of the injunction of the Civil Court and the cutting of the western bandh. The District Magistrate had no right to usurp the functions of the Civil Court in this way; the injunction was still subsisting and could only be dissolved by the Court which granted it and it was the High Court alone which could construe its own decree and say whether the circumstances had arisen which would justify the dissolution of the injunction and the cutting of the bandh.

Held, further in the result there was no order in express terms to cut the bandh and no one was entitled to cut the bandh in view of the Civil Court's injunction which was still subsisting and this being so the common objects set out in the charge had not been established and therefore the conviction of and sentence passed on the petitioners must be set aside. Held, that an order passed by the Magistrate under S. 144 was wrong especially when he passed the order without issuing any preliminary notice to the petitioners and without hearing them on the point; it was open to him either to direct that the opposite party should be made parties to the proceedings then pending under S. 145 or a notice should have been issued on the petitioners to show cause. —S. 10—Effect of S. 10 of Bengal Alluvial Lands Act is to stay earlier proceedings under S. 145.

Some char lands became the subject-matter of proceedings under S. 145, and at the time when proceedings were initiated an attachment order was made against the lands. Various steps were taken in those proceedings and subsequently the Magistrate after reviewing the situation passed an order directing that the lands be released from attachment under S. 145 and decided to replace those proceedings with others under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, 1920. It was contended that S. 10 of that Act was intended to apply to proceedings under S. 145 so far as their institution or carrying on was concerned and not to the attachment order made under that section and that once an attachment was made, S. 10 conferred no right on the Collector to make a further attachment under that Act.

Held, that, if the contention were sound, it would result in nullifying the provisions of the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act of 1920. The provisions of S. 10 were wide enough to apply to all proceedings, including an attachment that may have been had under S. 145. The effect of S. 10, Bengal Alluvial Lands Act, would, therefore, be to stay the earlier proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. C. 13 C. W. N. 125 ; A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 631, Dist. The jurisdiction of a Magistrate to deal with disputes concerning land is strictly limited. A very exceptional jurisdiction in that regard has been conferred upon him by S. 145. —Magistrate should collect information and sift evidence thoroughly before passing order under S. 146.

It should be held as a very important principle in cases under S. 145 that a Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute. It is quite intelligible that he might be in a position to say with confidence that he was unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the parties in cases where the land is jungle or waste. But where there is land admittedly subject year by year and season by season to cultivation, the Magistrate will be only admitting his own weakness if he states that he cannot come to a decision. He has before him two parties quite ready with information. The information may be true or false but it is his duty to collect information and sift it. After all the order under S. 146 is almost the same as an act of confiscation and therefore the Magistrate should naturally be reluctant to make use of that section. (Foster, J.) RAM BAHAL SINGH v. —S. 145—Breach of peace.

—It is necessary for making an order under S. 145 that the Magistrate should be satisfied at the time of drawing up the proceedings that there is then existing a likelihood of breach of the peace arising from the disputes between the parties with regard to the land in question. The making of an order, therefore, some months after the report on which it was purported to be passed, cannot be supported. (Sukrawady and Costello, J.J.) ANANDI LAL MUKHERJEE v. —Proceedings under S. 145 cannot be compromised nor can they be referred to arbitration.

Proceedings under S. 145 cannot be compromised, nor can they be submitted to arbitration; all that can be done is that there may be an agreement as to the mode of taking evidence as regards actual possession on the date of the preliminary order either by a Commissioner or by arbitrators. Such a Commissioner or arbitrators have no power to decide the case, but can only submit a report, and the Magistrate would then be bound to take that report into consideration before passing an order. It has, however, always to be borne in mind that if the parties come to any agreement with regard to a dispute even an agreement as regards the mode of ascertaining actual possession it at once becomes doubtful whether there is any likelihood of a breach of the peace, and if the Magistrate is satisfied that no likelihood of a breach of the peace exists he should cancel his preliminary order under S. 145 (5). Where in a suit for recovery of possession, possession is decreed, although the decree may be ex parte, as between judgment-debtor and decree holder for purposes of S. 145, the presumption is that the decree-holder entered into possession on the date of the decree and continued till his possession was disturbed by the judgment-debtor, and the onus is on the judgment-debtor to prove his entry subsequent to date of decree. —S. 145—Defect in procedure—Absence of evidence.

Magistrate passing order without recording any evidence is irregular.

In a case regarding possession of the property in dispute the counter-petitioner was absent at the final hearing of the case. The trying Magistrate passed order in favour of the petitioner without recording any evidence at all, upon the question of possession.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to found an order upon the mere absence of a party.

Held further, that the irregularity is material enough for the counter-petitioner to be entitled to have it set right. 6 C. W. N. 925 and 12 C. W. N. 771, Rel. on. Where in a proceeding under S. 145 there is a total lack of evidence or even of circumstances from which a presumption can reasonably be drawn that a party had knowledge of the proceedings the Magistrate's procedure in going on with the case ex parte amounts to much more than a technical irregularity and it is impossible to hold that the party was, or may not have been prejudiced thereby. —Proceedings are not ultra vires because some parties in possession are unlikely to cause breach of peace—Some parties filing compromise can be put into possession—Not every error vitiates proceedings—Mutation order does not affect order under S. 145.

In S. 145 the words "parties concerned in such disputes" include all persons claiming to be in possession and merely because some of those parties are unlikely to cause a breach of the peace, the proceedings under the section are not without jurisdiction. The result of the proceedings will not be invalidated by any and every error and a radical defect must be established corrupting the whole proceedings before their jurisdiction can be questioned. The mere fact that some of the parties file a compromise does not prevent the Magistrate from putting such parties into possession although had the compromise been filed by all the parties and had there been no longer any dispute, it might be held that the Magistrate's jurisdiction had ceased and that he was only empowered to cancel the proceedings under cl. 5 of section 145. In so far as a Magistrate's order in proceedings under S. 145 limits the period within which a civil suit may be brought by any of the parties, an order in mutation proceedings does not affect the Magistrate's order under section 145 because an order in mutation proceedings is not a final decision as to ownership. —Magistrate should carefully scrutinize the evidence in cases under S. 145 and discourage private individuals from misusing the law.

There is far too great a tendency amongst private individuals to file applications under S. 145 simply as a first move which they imagine may put them in an advantageous position in the subsequent civil litigation as against the party with whom they are at logger-heads. This misuse of these provisions of law requires to be discouraged, and therefore though the Magistrate can rely on the police report, ordinarily it would be well for Magistrates to carefully scrutinize the evidence in this connexion in this class of cases. 33 Cal. 352, Rel. on. —Under sub-S. 4, S. 145, the Magistrate has to decide the question of possession without reference to the merits of the claim of any party and a proper judgment under the section should state the case of both parties and then leave alone the question of title. —S. 145—Duty of Magistrate—Preliminary and final order.

—The provisions of S. 145 (1) are mandatory and a disregard of those provisions vitiates the entire proceedings in the case. The Magistrate who has to draw up the order under S. 145 (1) is the Magistrate who after drawing up the order proceeds to decide the case. (Iqbal Ahmed, J.) BANKA SINGH v. GOKUL. 99 I.C. 1031 = 49 All. 325 = 25 A.L.J. 246 = 8 L.R.A. Cr. 39 = 28 Cr. L. J. 231 = 7 A.I. Cr. R. 267 = A.I.R. 1927 All. 286.

—The existence of dispute likely to cause breach of peace is absolutely necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction.

The powers conferred upon criminal courts by S. 145 are somewhat of an exceptional character because they enable the Magistrate mentioned in the section to partially deal with a matter over which civil courts have jurisdiction. Therefore the requirements of the section should be strictly followed. A Magistrate would have no jurisdiction unless he was satisfied that there existed a dispute concerning land, etc., and which dispute is likely to induce a breach of the peace. A formal order to this effect under sub-S. (1) is absolutely necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction. A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 91, Foll. (Abdul Raouf, J.) DHANI RAM v. KALI RAM. 26 P. L. R. 712 = 105 I. C. 685 = 28 Cr. L. J. 973 = A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 805.

—Failure to make initial order vitiates proceedings.

Under S. 145 (1) it is first of all essential that the Magistrate should be satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists and that he should make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being satisfied. Omission to pass an order under sub-S. 1 is not a mere technical defect. Where the Magistrate has not made the initial order prescribed by that sub-section, and has also not made at any subsequent stage of the proceedings an order which essentially complies with the requirements of that sub-section the proceedings are without jurisdiction and cannot be re-

—S. 145—Duty of Magistrate—Quick disposal.

—Original application should not be sent to police —Magistrate must himself be satisfied as to likelihood of breach—Proceedings should not be dilatory.

The Magistrate must be alert, active and prompt. The Magistrate must himself be satisfied, and he must form his own judgment and not proceed automatically upon a mere opinion of the police or the direction of some other officer. 33 Cal. 33, Foll. His decision that there is a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace is the very foundation of all subsequent investigation and without it the latter is void and inoperative. The object of S. 145 being the prevention of a breach of the peace the foundation of jurisdiction is its likelihood. 21 Cal. 29 and 30 All. 41, Foll. Both the fact that he is satisfied and the grounds thereof must appear in the first order directing the issue of notice. Where a party being wrongfully dispossessed moved the Magistrate to initiate proceedings under S. 145 and the Magistrate thinking fit to invite police report sent the application itself in original for enquiry and report to the police, and the police report reached the Magistrate after a considerable delay and he passed an order which did not fulfil the requirements of S. 145, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the Magistrate failed to appreciate the true and proper scope of the application, and to pass orders according to law, but by his dilatory procedure, deprived the party dispossessed of the valuable right to claim benefit of the presumption of continuance of his possession for a space of two months next prior to the date of his preliminary order, and thus defeated the very object with which the legislature enacted Prov. 1, sub-S. 4. —Where a Sub-Divisional Magistrate makes an order under S. 145 (1) and fills up form 22 in Sch. 5, it is necessary to send the proceedings back to him in order that he may write proper judgment. —Magistrate must give reasons for his decision.

Per Buckland, J.—Whether Ss. 366 and 367 do or do not apply to proceedings under S. 145, Magistrate must give a statement of the reasons for the decision sufficient to determine whether he has or has not complied with sub-S. (4) of S. 145 and directed his mind to the consideration of the effect of the evidence adduced before him. To what extent a Magistrate should state the reasons cannot be laid down by a general rule, but provided he states the reasons so as to enable the High Court to appreciate and deal with the case in revision, a degree of brevity which would be out of place in a judgment to which S. 337 applies would not necessarily be open to objection.

In a case where certain persons claim to have a right to bury their dead in a burial ground the Magistrate should address himself to the question whether the persons claiming the right exercised that right when occasion arose. The fact that a portion of the ground was ploughed and sown is no ground for thinking that is not a burial ground. —Positive evidence as to likelihood of breach must exist—Religious nature of dispute leads to no inference—Past conduct of parties is good evidence.

The object of S. 145 is to bring to an end by a summary process, disputes relating to land, etc., which are in their nature likely, if not suppressed, to end in breaches of the peace. But the mere circumstance that the dispute is one of a religious nature is not enough. There must be positive evidence on the record that the breach of the peace is likely to occur if proceedings under this section are not taken. Where it appears that the land which in 1880 was shown as a part of the Mahomedan graveyard has been gradually brought under cultivation to the prejudice of the Muhammadan community by the owners who were Brahmins and no breach of the peace has occurred during the last 40 years, held that it was hardly likely that any such untoward result should now ensue if the property is not attached under S. 146. —Non filing of written statement does not take away jurisdiction of Magistrate to try case—Case ready for trial can be transferred—Proceedings against parties claiming exclusive plots are maintainable.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 145—Government of India Act, S. 107.

—When proceedings are instituted without jurisdiction under S. 145, the High Court has inherent power to set aside proceedings and pass consequential orders.

It is now well-settled that a High Court is competent, in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 (which replaced S. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861), to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a subordinate Court under S. 145; such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding S. 435 (3), which lays down that proceedings under Chapter XII (which comprises Ss. 145-148) are not proceedings within the meaning of that section. The High Court can, when it sets aside the proceedings, proceed to give such consequential directions as may be founded necessary in the interests of justice in the circumstances of the particular case. Although the Cr. P. Code does not contain a provision corresponding to S. 151 of the C. P. Code, yet the inherent power of Courts is in no sense restricted in application to civil cases; it is equally applicable to criminal matters. The power is not capriciously or arbitrarily exercised; it is exercised ex debito justitiæ to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist; but the Court, in the exercise of such inherent power, must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or with the intentions of the Legislature as indicated in statutory provisions. Where in a dispute as to lac between tenants and zamindars it was manifestly impossible to restore the physical condition of things as they existed when the proceedings under S. 145 were instituted and where the title was in dispute and the Court was not in a position to make an assumption as to possession in favour of either party.

Held, that in such circumstances, the best course to adopt was to keep the property in the custody of the Court pending decision by a Civil Court on the question of title. 1 M. L. —S. 145—Joint possession.

—Two things essential for proceedings under S. 145 are dispute and possession.

In proceedings under S. 145 the first thing to be decided is whether there is a dispute likely to lead to a breach of peace and secondly which party of the disputants is in actual possession. Previously both parties were in the joint possession. But after the dispute the property was kept under attachment by order of Court till the parties established their exclusive right to it. Afterwards one of the parties produced the partition chitthi which allotted the disputed property to him, while the other offered no evidence as to possession. The Magistrate put the former in possession.

—S. 145—Large area.

—Trial of numerous claims held together is not illegal, if the subject-matters are linked together.

Proceedings were initiated between two sets of persons both of whom claimed a large area of somewhat over 300 bighas situated in the domain of the Maharaja of Darbhanga. The first party claimed to be in possession as tenants of the Raj from long past, the second party claimed to have recently been settled on the land by the Raj and to be in possession thereof. The lands were not co-terminus, but they were divided into some 23 different plots. They were not claimed jointly or as a whole by all of the eight parties of the first party, but each party claimed to be in possession of certain of these plots.

Held, there is nothing to prevent a Magistrate from joining numerous claims of this description together and in dealing with the matter at one hearing. The only objection which can really be taken to such a course is, if it can be shown, that the objector is adversely prejudiced by such proceeding, and the fact, that the Magistrate does not in his judgment state which of the first party is actually according to his finding, in possession of which part of the property in dispute, does not concern the second party at all. Molasses can be treated as the produce of the factory within the meaning of S. 145 (8) where the land about which there is dispute consists of factory building including vats. A sugar mill produces molasses. The word "produce" is not necessarily confined to what is grown on the ground. It refers also to a finished article or semi-finished article made from raw material. Where, therefore, the produce is subject to speedy and natural decay, the Magistrate's order for its sale is justified and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass such order. —The word "wrongful", in S. 145, Cr. P. Code, does not imply absence of legal right—Entry by force even by one having legal right to possession is wrongful.

Per Marten, J.—The word "wrongful" does not involve the idea that the dispossessor has no legal right to the possession of the property. Even a rightful owner, for instance, a landlord who is entitled to possession in a case where is tenant is wrongfully holding over, can only take possession peaceably. If his possession is opposed, however wrongfully, then the landlord has no right to break down the doors, to assault the inmates and to turn them vi et armis out of the building. He must go to the Civil Court and get the necessary warrants or ejectment orders to enable, if necessary, the proper authorities to effect a forcible entry or a forcible ejectment according to law. There is clear distinction between forcible entries which are rightful and forcible entries which are wrongful, and that depends on whether the person entering was entitled to use force, and not merely on whether he had a legal right to possession. If, for instance, a landlord came armed with a writ or a warrant in his favour to eject his former tenant then although force might in the end be used, it would not be a wrongful dispossession. If, on the other hand, he took the law into his own hands and used force without any such legal sanction by means of warrant, then that would be an instance where he would have forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed his former tenant.

Per Pratt, J.—The phrase "forcibly and wrongfully" has the same meaning as forcible entry without due warrant of law under the English statute. A forcible entry must be wrongful unless it is in execution of a legal process. The word "wrongfully," therefore, means —The provisions of S. 145 are directed to enable a Magistrate to pass orders as to retention of possession with the object of preventing a breach of the peace. These orders have no effect as to title, but a special exception is made in favour of persons who have been very recently dispossessed. (Stuart, C. J.) EMPEROR v. BAIJNATH. 5 Luck. 440 = I. —Cases, besides the one under S. 145, relating to same subject-matter pending—S. 145 case must be finished first.

—S. 145—Object of.

The idea of S. 145 is that it is a short and summary manner of awarding possession until other cases connected with the subject-matter of the proceedings under S. 145 are decided so that there may not be breach of the peace. does not matter if the finding in regard to possession is wrong. (Hallifax, A. J. C.) GANPAT KUNBI v. DEWAJI. 110 I. C. 228 = 29 Cr. L. J. 676 = 10 A. I. Cr. R. 411.

—It is not one of the objects of S. 145 to protect or maintain any body's possession. The sole object of the proceeding is to prevent an imminent breach of the peace and the decision in regard to it must be made at once. (Hallifax, A. J. C.) EMPEROR v. MT. FHUTANJA. 81 I. C. 933 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1109 = A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 142.

—The object of S. 145 is to finally terminate the dispute between the parties so far as the Criminal Court is concerned so as to effectively put a stop to any breach of the peace. It is with this object that the decision of the Magistrate under S. 145 is declared to be final and conclusive until it is set aside by a competent Civil Court which determines the right of the parties. (Jwala Prasad, J.) ABDUL SHAKUR v. ABU SAYEED. 86 I. C. 806 = 6 P. L. T. 710 = 26 Cr. L. J. 870 = A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 593.

—Magistrate's decision under S. 145 will not be binding on the parties whose written statement Magistrate had refused to admit as it tends by defeat the object of the section.

The very object of the proceeding under Section 145 of the Code is to put an end to disputes as to possession of immovable properties so as to prevent a breach of the peace. This object cannot be gained until all the contending parties are on the record and an opportunity is given to them to put forward their respective claims. The effect of an order rejecting the written statement of certain parties is that his decision under S. 145 will not be binding upon them. (Jwala Prasad, J.) RAGHUNATH KUER v. RAJKISHORE KUER. 81 I. C. 442 = 5 P. L. T. 458 = 25 Cr. L. J. 906 = A. I. R. 1924 Pat. 783.

—S. 145—Order without jurisdiction.

—Magistrate attaching whole property under S. 145 at the instance of the Collector is without jurisdiction and must be quashed.

The Civil Court decreed joint possession to the petitioners and the opposite party, an appeal against which decree was pending before the Privy Council. The opposite party applied for partition which was made by a revenue officer and possession of portion of the land was given to the opposite party. The partition proceedings were subsequently quashed by the Financial Commissioner who directed that the status quo ante be restored. The Collector, however, did not wish to do so and at his instance the Magistrate attached the whole of the land appointed a receiver under S. 145, holding that there was a dispute about the whole area.

Held, that the proceedings taken by the Magistrate were without jurisdiction and must be quashed. (Addison, J.) WALI MUHAMMAD v. RAHMAT ALI. 110 I. C. 807 = 11 A. I. Cr. R. 44 = 29 Cr. L. J. 775 = A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 818.

—The Magistrate cannot take proceedings under the section when land in dispute not within his jurisdiction.

Application was made to the District Magistrate praying for action to be taken under S. 145. The District Magistrate took the petition on file and without himself taking action under S. 145 (1) transferred it to Sub-Divisional Magistrate under him for disposal. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate made an order under S. 145 (1). But the land concerned was not within the local limits of his jurisdiction.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 145—Order without jurisdiction.

Held, that the District Magistrate was wrong in transferring the case to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate who had no jurisdiction over the land concerned. The District Magistrate had no power to alter the boundaries of any sub-division of his District permanently, temporarily, or for the purpose of any particular case. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order therefore was without jurisdiction. 26 Mad. 188 and 22 Cal. 898, Dist.; 41 Mad. 246, Appr. (Reilly, J.) CHELLAPATHI NAIDU v. SUBBA NAIDU. 52 Mad. 241=114 I. —Order under S. 145.

Where a Magistrate passes an order as to the mode of possession, his order does not give a cause of action for a suit which, if not brought within the statutory period, makes that portion of the order binding between the parties, the order being without jurisdiction. The intention of the law of limitation is that if no suit is brought within the statutory period the remedy is lost and in case of an order of a competent Court it remains binding between the parties. —S. 145—Period of possession —Opposite party being admittedly in possession at date of order—S. 146 is inapplicable.

N applied under S. 145 for an order restoring him to possession of a house from which he had been dispossessed by G, five days before the date of the petition. G replied that he had been in possession of the house for many years and that there was no such dispute as was likely to bring about a breach of the peace. The Magistrate holding that the evidence of either party was untrustworthy held that it was impossible to decide on the evidence whether any or which of the parties was at the date of his preliminary order in possession of the house. He, however, took action under S. 146.

Held, that the portion of the order of the Magistrate where he stated that it was impossible to decide which party was in possession on the date of the preliminary order was wrong as admittedly G had been in possession since at least five days before the application by N. There was no necessity to decide as to who was in possession on the date of his order.

Held, further that it could have been competent for the Magistrate to take action under S. 146 had none of the parties been in possession at the date of the preliminary order if it could not be decided as to which of them was in possession at the date. But as G was in possession then S. 146 did not apply. The Magistrate could have also restored possession under S. 145 (6) to N if he could have held that he was in possession within two months next before the date of the preliminary order. —Magistrate can refuse to take action except on a report from the police.

A Magistrate as a general rule may refuse to take action at all under S. 145 except when a report from the police is sent to him on the matter. Even when such report is sent to the Magistrate it should not be a mere forwarding of a report made to the police by one of the parties even though accompanied by a record of the inquiry made by a police officer in the same matter. But it must be a definite statement of opinion by a responsible police officer to the effect that he apprehends that there will be a disturbance of the peace which is beyond his powers to prevent and that he therefore desires the exercise of the higher powers of the Magistrate to prevent it. When such report is not sent to the Magistrate the fact will almost be conclusive as an indication of the absence of any likelihood of the breach of the peace. (Hallifax, A. J. C.) EMPEROR v. MT. —S. 145—Possession.

—Continuous possession does not mean possession exercised every day of the year.

The possession claimed by persons other than the landlords having been disbelieved, possession is presumed to be with parties who have title to the land. This possession may not be actual possession. Possession under S. 145 must be absolute and continuous and not occasional. But it is not intended that possession must be such as should be exercised continuously or every day of the year. "By continuous possession" is meant such possession which a party in possession may have occasion to exercise and has exercised and exercises whenever he likes. Continuity of possession should be understood with reference to the object over which it is exercised.

—Magistrate can drop proceedings once started if he finds no likelihood of breach of peace.

Proceedings under S. 145 are not taken in the interests of private parties but for the preservation of the public peace and if the Magistrate is satisfied that the likelihood of the breach of the peace either did not exist or that it has ceased to exist, it is the proper duty of the Magistrate to drop proceedings under S. 145 and withdraw from interfering with the rights of parties in the property. 30 Cal. 112, Rel. on; 20 M. L. W. 58, Foll.

Clause (5) of S. 145 provides for a special case where as the Magistrate is proceeding with the trial of the question of possession, the parties of the proceedings or even other persons who are interested are given the right to show that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists or has existed. The existence of this clause does not take away the power of the Magistrate himself to drop proceedings if he is satisfied that there is no further likelihood of the breach of the peace. But after he drops the proceedings under S. 145 he is functus officio and has no jurisdiction to pass any further orders in the case, e.g., with regard to the delivery of the possession of the attached property to either party. He must leave the parties to settle their rights in the manner they think best to do, in the meanwhile holding his hands. 1 M. L. W. 1032 and A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 327, Foll.; A. I. —Joint Hindu family disputes—Order not proper.

A Magistrate took proceedings under S. 145 in respect of a dispute between three Hindu brothers and with regard to property which was formerly joint family property. The question in dispute was whether the three brothers were jointly entitled to the property in dispute or there had been partition in virtue of which the property in dispute had fallen to the share of the eldest brother who was in possession. The Magistrate could not make up his mind on the question and as he would not satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in exclusive possession of the land in dispute, he applied S. 146 and attached the land until the rights of the parties thereto were determined by a competent Court.

Held, that although it could not be said that the Magistrate's order under S. 146 was not competent it was an order which ought not have been made under the circumstances of the case. It was clear that whether there had been partition or not the eldest brother was entitled to be in possession. If the alleged partition really took place then he was entitled to be in possession in his own right. If it did not take place he was entitled to be in possession as the eldest brother and the manager of the family. The order of attachment, therefore, was not reasonable and if there was any danger to the breach of the peace, proper order would have been to take proceedings under S. 107 and bind the parties for such term as was necessary. Code, the Magistrate attached the land under S. 146 and appointed a Receiver thereof referring the parties to the Civil Court for the determination of their rights, and where a suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was the owner of the land,

Held, that where it is not known whether it was the plaintiff or the defendant who was guilty of interference with possession or dispossession, all that one can say as to what led the Magistrate to take possession is that it was either his inability to decide who was in actual possession or his decision that neither party was in possession and that neither of these can be said to be wrong by the defendant. —Subsequent decision though not inter partes.

An underground colliery together with certain huts and workings on the surface of the land were attached under S. 145 on 29th March 1922. On the 27th of March 1923 the Subordinate Judge gave a decision relating to a money claim put forward by some person against some members of the second party, as certain rights in respect of the colliery purported to be demised by some of the second party to the plaintiff in that suit had failed. With respect to the ownership of the colliery some part of which was the subject-matter in dispute under proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, the Sub-Judge came to the conclusion adverse to the rights of the members of the second party. The first party upon this applied to the Magistrate for withdrawal of the attachment and for declaration of possession in accordance with the decree of the Sub-Judge. The Magistrate granted the prayer.

Held, that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order under Sub-S. 1 of S. 146, Cr. P. Code, in view of the decision of the Sub-Judge. (Greaves and Panton, J.J.) ASES KUMAR MISRA v. KISSORI MOHAN SARKAR.

—Duty of Magistrates

It should be held as a very important principle in cases under S. 145 that a Magistrate should be extremely reluctant to attach the property in dispute. It is quite intelligible that he might be in a position to say with confidence that he was unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the parties in cases where the land is jungle or waste. But where there is land admittedly subject year by year and season by season to cultivation, the Magistrate will be only admitting his own weakness if he states that he cannot come to a decision. He has before him two parties quite ready with information. The information may be true or false but it is his duty to collect information and shift it. After all the order under S. 146 is almost the same as an act of confiscation and therefore the Magistrate should naturally be reluctant to make use of that section. —Decision as to possession necessary prior to attachment.

It is not a Magistrate's business to speculate whether his order under S. 145 will prejudice a future decision, perhaps several years hence, in a revenue proceeding. It is also not sound to check his hand because his decision is not final. Although it is true that an attachment under S. 146 will as effectually prevent a breach of the peace as a decision in favour of a party under S. 145, a reasonable effort, varying of course with the circumstances of each particular case, must be made to decide as to possession before there is jurisdiction to attach the subject-matter under S. 146. 40 C. 105, Ref. —S. 146—Release.*—No breach of peace—Decision of competent Court regarding possession.

Once an order under S. 146, Cr. P. Code, has been passed by a Court it can come to an end only under one of two circumstances, the first being that there is no longer any likelihood of a breach of the peace in regard to the subject-matter of the dispute, in which case the Magistrate would be competent to withdraw the order of attachment and he can do so at any time at which there is no such likelihood; and secondly, it is competent for a Magistrate to release the subject-matter of the dispute from attachment if a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties to the proceedings of the person entitled to possession of the subject-matter of the dispute. If one could prove that a road was a public road either by showing that it had been dedicated to the public or that from time immemorial it had been freely used by the public, no question of easement in favour of a private individual would arise. The words "institution of inquiry" in the proviso to Cl. 2, S. 147 does not mean the date of the drawing up of the formal proceedings under S. 147, but it means the date on which the complainant first brings his grievance to the notice of the Magistrate either directly or indirectly through the police, and the Magistrate takes action with a view to enquiring into the allegation, although that action is merely a preliminary to the eventual institution of a formal proceeding. Hence the period of three months is to be calculated from the date, the complainant first approaches the Magistrate and not from the date of institution of formal proceedings. 44 C. L. J. 214, Foll. —Bona fide claim of right.

The provisions of S. 147 are of an emergency nature and are conducted more or less summarily. If the Magistrate, as the result of hearing the evidence, thinks that reasonable grounds have been shown to him that a bona fide claim of right exists, then he is justified in passing such order as he may think fit. It is not expected that he should usurp the functions of the Civil Court or that the enquiry under S. 147 should be a formal trial of the matter in issue. The actual rights of the parties must await determination in a civil suit. The words "such right exists" must be understood to mean "such rights as is claimed." (Bucknill, J.) *P. D. AMIR & CO. v. The mere fact that they did not exercise the right during the preceding year is not sufficient to show that the right does not exist, and it only goes to the question of the Magistrate from issuing an order under Sub-S. Where there is a right to the water coming through a pyne and it is indispensable to the exercise of that right, that a cutting in the bank should be closed it is merely a matter ancillary to the declaration of the right to the water and if the first party are to be prohibited from interfering with the exercise of this right to the water on the part of the second party, this can only be done effectively by restraining them from preventing the second party from closing this cutting in the bank. There is nothing in the proviso against passing of an order of this kind as it is in no sense a mandatory injunction. (Ross, J.) RAM DHAN PURI v. BARHAMDEO. 121 I. C. 461 =

—Order allowing withdrawal or staying proceedings under S. 145—Costs can be awarded.

An order permitting the withdrawal of proceedings, and more so a final irrevocable order staying proceedings instituted under S. 145 of the Code after the Magistrate has assumed jurisdiction under that section, is an order falling within the purview of Sub-S. 5 of that section, and as such decision under that section within the meaning of S. 148. It is a decision by him that no such dispute has existed or exists, as to give him jurisdiction to continue the proceedings. There is nothing in Sub-S. (5) to prevent a Magistrate in arriving at the decision without recording any evidence whatsoever; and it is equally within his competence to rely upon information recorded by him from any source whatsoever including that contained in a statement made by any party to the proceedings. 9 M.L.T. 324, Diss. from; 30 Cal. 112 and 20 Cal. 867, Kel. on. Where, therefore, a Magistrate has permitted the withdrawal of the proceedings or has made an order staying proceedings altogether, it may fairly be assumed that he has acted on such implied admission and has decided under Sub-S. —S. 148—Local inspection.*—Principles regarding.

Section 148 clearly provides for local inspection whenever such enquiry is deemed necessary for the purposes of Chapter XII of the Code. Such enquiry can be made either by any Magistrate subordinate to the Magistrate before whom the case is pending or by that Magistrate himself. Although as a rule it is better to have such an investigation made by some other person, there is nothing in law to prevent the presiding Magistrate from making the investigation himself, provided he records what he saw and does not act upon hearsay evidence. It is a salutary principle of law that the finding of a Court must be based upon evidence duly recorded by it and not upon the impression formed by the judge on a local inspection of the locality. He can then in order to elucidate the evidence make a local inspection and the object of a local enquiry would be only with a view to understand the evidence actually adduced in the case. Moreover it is absolutely necessary that if a Magistrate makes a local enquiry he must make a note of what he saw and must place it on the record so that the parties may be in a position to know what impression the Magistrate had got by the local enquiry. —Per Sulaiman, J.—To hold that under S. 149 a police officer can pass any oral order he thinks desirable, would be to hold that his word is law. If his powers were to be so wide, it would be unnecessary for the Magistrate or the police to take any precautionary measures in advance; it would be quite sufficient to send down a Sub-Inspector to the scene and let him pass all sorts of sweeping orders, disobedience of which will entail conviction. Such method, if sanctioned, would deprive the persons concerned of all opportunity to appeal to higher authorities, and they would have to submit to such orders at the peril of a prosecution. Such wide powers vested in a police officer would interfere unreasonably with the ordinary liberty of private citizens and could not have been contemplated to be within the scope of S. 149, Cr. P. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 154—Contents.*—List of stolen property—Map prepared by police.

A list of stolen property handed to a Police Officer in the course of investigation is not admissible in evidence and should not be placed before the jury. The admission of such a list however would not of itself vitiate the trial unless it is shown that the accused have been prejudiced by such admission. Where the names of certain persons are sent to the Police as being the names of those who are suspected of being concerned in the commission of an offence and the evidence of the person who supplied these names to the Police is challenged in Court, the list of names supplied by him is admissible in evidence to corroborate his statement. A map which contains upon it certain things which must have been supplied to the Police Officer by some person should not be admitted unless there had been the evidence of the person as to what he said to the officer and the evidence of the Police Officer as to what the person told him. ## —S. 160—'Any person'.

—Meaning.

The expression "any person" used in Ss. 160, 161 and 162 has one and the same meaning and denotes one and the same class of persons. That class is described with sufficient accuracy in S. 160, in which the expression is for the first time used. Every person belonging to that class must be a person who is within the limits of the station of the police officer making the investigation, or in an adjoining station, who from the information given or otherwise appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case and who is bound to attend on an order in writing being issued to him by the said officer. An accused person who is in police custody cannot fall under this class of persons, for the simple reason that the question of a summons being issued to him and of the obligation to attend cannot possibly arise in his case, he being in police custody. —Remarks of Police officer.

The police officer in charge of an investigation is not debarred from making explanatory remarks in reference to his own conduct even though it may inferentially have reference to the statements made by witnesses; and their admissibility in evidence is not to be questioned. Evidence of police officers who give evidence with regard to the identification parades which were held and who depose to certain of the accused having been identified by prosecution witnesses in an identification parade is not inadmissible in evidence under S. 162, as their evidence does not relate to any statement made to the police but is a simple exposition of a fact or circumstances witnessed by themselves. So far as authenticity goes, a telegram stands in no better position than village gossip. There is no guarantee that a telegram received has actually been sent by the person who purports to send it and it undoubtedly would be the duty of the police officer on receiving the telegram that an offence has been committed, to verify the fact that it was really sent as it purports to have been sent. Where the police officer went to the place from which the telegram was sent and examined the person by whom it purported to have been sent and he confirmed the fact of sending it and gave other details of the offence which he alleged to have been committed.

Under S. 162 a statement made before the investigating officer can be used for the purpose of contradicting such witness when produced at the trial but after strict compliance with the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act,

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 162—Contradiction.

If the witness admits to have made the statement the previous statement in writing need not be proved. If he denies to have made any such statement and it is intended to contradict him the relevant portions of the record contrary to his statement in Court must be read to him and the witness should be given the opportunity to reconcile the same. It is only after this is done that the record of the previous statement becomes admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting the witness and can then be proved in any manner provided by law. S. 158 of Evidence Act, places a person whose statement has been used as evidence under S. 32 in the same category as a witness actually produced in Court for the purpose of contradicting his statement by a previous statement made by him. The copy of statement of a witness before police can only be refused, if the statement or statements contained therein are not relevant or their disclosure is not essential in the interests of justice or expedient to the public interests. The mere fact that the statement of the witness before the police does not in the opinion of the trying Magistrate contradict the evidence of the witness in the Court is no reason for refusing to grant the copy. If during the course of the trial after the charge is framed the accused desires to cross examine prosecution witnesses further and applies to the trying Magistrate to grant him copies of the statements made by the witnesses to the police during the investigation, the Magistrate should allow him such copies and should not pass judgment without disposing of such application, and if the appellate Court finds that the statements of witness were recorded in the diary he should remand the case and allow the copies to the accused. *A. The Court cannot refuse to grant copies to the accused of the statements of prosecution witness, which have been previously reduced to writing, because on a perusal thereof it considers that there is no contradiction of the depositions recorded in Court. There is nothing in S. 162 to authorize the Court to look into the statement in the police diaries for the purpose of finding out whether it is contradictory to the statement made in Court or not before granting the application. —Statement of accused after arrest.

The word "statement" in S. 162, Cr. P. Code, is a very general word. It is intended to refer to statements recorded under the provisions of Ss. 160 and 161, Cr. P. Code. A clear distinction is drawn in S. 173, Cr. P. Code, between "persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case" and the accused, and this must raise a doubt whether the phrase "persons supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case" in S. 161 includes an accused after arrest, but the side note to S. 161 can be used to assist to come to the conclusion that S. 161 is not intended to apply to an arrested accused. Therefore it follows that S. 162 does not refer to statements made by an accused after arrest. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 116 (F. B.), Foll. (Findlay, J. C. and Macnair, A. J. C.) *SHIOBALAK PRASAD v. —Neither statement by accused nor first information report is covered by S. 162.

Statements by accused are not within S. 162. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 116 (F. B.); A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 88 and A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 232, Foll. The first information report against the accused is clearly not a statement within the contemplation of S. 162 because it is not made in the course of an investigation. Such report has to be tendered under one or other of the provisions of the Evidence Act. The usual course is for the prosecution to call the informant and for the first information to be tendered as corroboration under S. 157; but it could also be tendered in a proper case under S. 32 (1) as a declaration as to the cause of the informant's death, or as part of the informant's conduct (of the res gestae) under S. 8. Theoretically, the defence could prove the information to impeach the informant's credit under S. 155 or to contradict him under S. 145. Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation can be used as corroboration under S. 157, or in contradiction under S. 145 or to impeach credit under S. 155 provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. This would apply to the prosecution and to the defence indifferently under the Evidence Act. But S. 162 of the Cr. P. Code, enacts first that if such a statement is not recorded in writing it cannot be used in evidence in any circumstance or for either side or for any purpose. A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 116 (F. B.); A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 399 and A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 510, Foll. If such a statement has been recorded in writing then it cannot be used for any purpose but one and that by the defence. Provided that the person who made it is called as a witness for the prosecution the defence may apply for a copy of the statement and if it be proved may use it under S. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict that witness. Broadly speaking, a statement made by an accused to police officer may be proved against him under the Evidence Act if it is not a confession; and even if it is part of a confession it is admissible under S. 27 if a fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information. S. 162 of the Cr. P. Code does not disturb this position. (Rankin and Duval, J.J.) AZIMODDY v. EMPEROR.

—For contradiction.

A copy of the statement made before the police cannot be used against the witness till he has been confronted with it. The right procedure, when a prosecution witness is contradicting himself, is to ask the Judge to look into the diary and decide whether the accused person should not have a copy of the statement. If such copy be granted, the witness's attention must be called to the same. A. I. R. 1915 P. C. 7, Ref. (Mears, C. J. and Mukerji, J.) KASHIRAM v. EMPEROR.

—The combined effect of the first two paragraphs of S. 162 is that when a witness for the prosecution is being examined, if an accused has reason to believe that the statement which the witness is making in Court differs from the statement which he made to the police, then the accused or his advocate may ask the Court to refer to the record of any statement made by the witness to the police and, if it be found that there is any variation between the two statements, the defence is entitled to a copy of the record of the statement made to the police. The copy must then be proved, and the witness may be cross-examined on that statement under S. 145, Evidence Act, and his attention must be drawn to the particular points in which his statement in Court differs from the record of his statement to the police. No doubt S. 162 of the Cr. P. Code of 1923 has altered the previous law so as to completely exclude statements made by witnesses during the course of an investigation, except for certain limited purposes, yet the statements of accused persons provided they do not amount to a confession, are still admissible in law. The main object of the Legislature in effecting the amendment was to prohibit the use of the statements of prosecution witnesses as corroboration under S. 157 of the Evidence Act. The general provisions of the law with regard to the admissibility of statements made by accused persons like other admissions do not seem to be affected. (*Mullick, A. C. —No copy prior to cross-examination.

So far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies of witness's statements made to the police should not be granted until the stage of cross-examination is reached. If that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. Under S. 145, Evidence Act, until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever. It should not therefore be placed in the accused's hands until that stage —At the trial the accused applied for copies of statements made by the witnesses for the prosecution and it was ordered by the trying Magistrate that the copies should be granted at the commencement of the cross-examination of each witness. But the pleader for the defence did not file any folios and did not do the necessary acts to get the copies, saying that it would be inconvenient for him to file folios at that stage and it was no use to get copies at a subsequent time.

Held, that the grievance of the defence that they were not given their rights under S. 162 was groundless and under the circumstances it was needless to consider whether the proper time for granting the copies was at the commencement of the cross-examination or at the time when the witness enters the witness-box. —S. 163—Assurance of amnesty.

—Not contrary to section.

The local Government prosecutes offenders. There is no law that it must prosecute every offender, and it is well known that offenders do manage to conceal their misdeeds or that evidence is found insufficient. There is nothing to prevent the prosecuting authority from refraining from prosecution. The discretion to refrain from instituting a prosecution in any particular case is inherent in the authority to which the Law has entrusted the power to institute a prosecution. It makes no difference to the competency of the witness if that assurance of non-prosecuting is communicated before the witness makes any statement. The Local Government is quite entitled to give such an assurance or amnesty and it is also entitled to ratify what has already been done by the enquiring officer. Such an assurance therefore in no way affects the competency of the witness to whom it is given, though it may affect the credibility of his evidence. Such an assurance is not contrary to Ss. 163 and 343 of Cr. P. Code. A. I. R. 1923 All. 91, Foll. (Prideaux, A.J.C.) ANANT WASUDEO CHANDERKAR v. EMPEROR. 89 I. C. 1035 = 8 N. L. J. 138 = 26 Cr. —Presence of—Presumption.

If, when a document is tendered in evidence at a trial purporting to be a confession of the accused, it is found to contain the memorandum required by S. 164 (3), a presumption arises under S. 80 of the Evidence Act that all the necessary formalities purporting to have been performed have in fact been performed and the document is admissible in evidence without further proof. If the said memorandum does not appear or is defect-tive, the document is inadmissible unless the defects can be cured by the examination of the Magistrate who recorded it under S. 533.

Where the memorandum at the foot of confession recorded does not conform with the form as laid down the defect is curable if it is of form and not of substance. If as a matter of fact, the statement was duly recorded that is to say, after the required explanation had been given, but the Magistrate had failed to embody that fact in the certificate such a defect would be curable. If the explanation had not been made the statement could not be held to have been 'duly made' and S. 533 cannot be appealed to. (Broadway and Addison, J.J.) PARTAP SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Sufficient compliance.

Where the Magistrate who recorded the confession did not sign the certificate which is prescribed by the Code as now amended and signed the certificate which was in use under the old Code and where the accused was not asked if he made the statement voluntarily, but was asked the following question only:—"Are you prepared to make a statement of your own free will?" and where the record of the confession too did not show that the appellant was warned that he was not bound to make a confession and that if he did, it might be used in evidence against him; but where the Magistrate himself was called as a witness and in his evidence, he said in clear terms, that he cautioned the accused, explaining to him that he was not bound to make any statement and that if he did so it might be used in evidence against him.

Held, that the confession, as recorded, was admissible in the case especially since the Magistrate had been examined and had shown that he had observed the provisions of the law. 9 Mad. 224; A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 237, Dist.; 2 Pat. —Accused pointing places of incidents—Notes by Magistrate at the time not a confessional statement.

Notes made by Magistrate while the accused pointed out several places to him could not be treated as evidence of confession of the accused to the Magistrate. The notes do not purport to be a record of the confessional statement by the approver or the other arrested persons, nor do they pretend to comply in any way with the provisions of S. 164. They are not in the form of questions and answers nor do they record even in a narrative from what each individual accused is supposed to have stated to the Magistrate. It is not mentioned in the notes nor is it deposited to orally by the Magistrate, that when an accused was brought before him, he satisfied himself that the former was going to make a statement voluntarily, nor was any attempt made to explain to him that his statement might be used as evidence against him. They were no more than a record of the proceedings of the Magistrate during the investigation and could not be admitted in evidence as a record of a confessional statement made by the accused. —S. 164—Inquiry and warning.*—Limits of questioning.

In recording confessions under S. 164, the Magistrate should merely record such confessions or statement as the accused might desire to make. It is no part of his duty to ask questions in detail on matters already within the Magistrate's knowledge and endeavour to reconcile the statements of the accused with other co-accused. But if the statement contains any real ambiguity it is the duty of the Magistrate with great caution and exercising great discretion to question the accused in order to eliminate the ambiguity and give him a chance to make his statement intelligible. Where the Magistrate, before recording a confession asked the accused: "Do you understand that you are at liberty to make a confession or not as you like, and are you aware that there is no necessity or compulsion on you to make any such statement or confession which may be used in evidence against you?"

Held: that the question satisfied the spirit of R. 196 (2). The specimens of questions suggested in the Criminal Rules of Practice seem to be leading questions suggesting torture or other ill-treatment by the police, and it seems to be undesirable to put such questions in the form mentioned in the rule. The whole object and policy of R. 196 is that a Magistrate should satisfy himself that there is no compulsion by the police or ill-treatment so as to raise the suspicion that the statement of the accused is not a voluntary statement, and so long as the spirit of the rule is satisfied it is undesirable that questions should be put in this form showing a total want of trust in the police. —Elucidation and not cross-examination.

It would be going much too far to say that a magistrate recording a statement or a confession under S. 164 cannot and should not ask a single question of the deponent. But it is equally certain that his position when recording such statement or confession, is merely that of a recording magistrate, and that he is in no sense enquiring into the case, and that he is in no sense an investigating officer. Such statements and confessions made to a police-officer are not regarded as being made in circumstances which justify a Court under ordinary circumstances, in relying upon the record of them, and they cannot be ordinarily put in evidence. But it is desirable that if a witness is really willing to make a statement, or a guilty person is really willing to make a confession, a record of that should be made in such circumstances as may make it reasonably safe to rely upon it. A magistrate would be justified in, and ought, in the ordinary performance of his duties, to clear up any matter which is ambiguous on the face of the statement, but he is wholly unjustified in extracting by questions from the deponent, facts which the deponent has not spoken to in his Court and facts of which the magistrate himself would only be aware of because he has been supplied with some copy of a statement which somebody else alleges the deponent has made and is willing to make again before the magistrate, or unless he is prompted by somebody who is aware of such facts. Everything must depend on the nature of the questioning and the object of it, and the mere fact that an answer was elicited by a question does not make the proceedings improper, or the statement inadmissible as a confession. Under S. 164 the magistrate is bound to record every question that he asked. It is of great importance that this provision of the law should be obeyed, otherwise it may be impossible to tell how far a witness voluntarily deposes to a matter, and how far it was extracted from him by questioning even in the nature of cross-examination. The only warning the magistrate recording confession gave to the accused was whether the accused was willing to make a voluntary confession and that if he made a confession that might be used against him. —Voluntary character—Essential.

Section 164 makes it imperative for a magistrate before recording a confession made to him in the course of a Police investigation to question the person making it as to whether he is making it voluntarily and where this is not done a confession is not admissible in evidence. When considering a confession recorded during the course of a Police investigation and which is subsequently retracted the Court must reach a definite conclusion that it is voluntarily made, before it is admitted in evidence. If the Court has any doubt on the point it should give the benefit of the doubt to the accused person.

S. 364, Cr. P. C. makes it obligatory upon the Magistrate who examines a person as an accused, to record the whole of the questions put to him and answers given by him. But statements whether in the nature of information given by witnesses about a crime or admissions by persons who have taken part in a crime, if made during the course of an investigation but before the commencement of trial or inquiry are governed by S. 164, which permits but does not compel the Magistrate to record the same. Oral evidence of a Magistrate who watches investigation conducted by the police under instructions given to him under S. 159, Cr. P. C. and who did not himself make any independent inquiry or record any statements from the available witnesses are admissible to prove that the accused confessed the crime to him though the statement was not recorded under S. 164. The Police produced an accused under S. 302, I. P. C. before a Magistrate on 1st September with a view to his committal to Sessions. The Magistrate adjourned the case to 2nd September in order to give opportunity to the accused to engage a counsel. On 2nd September however, the case was not taken by the Magistrate and the police took back the challan alleging that it was incomplete but on the same day a statement under S. 164 was recorded by the Magistrate, in which the accused made full confession of his guilt. Later on, at the close of the prosecution case, the accused retracted his confession alleging that the same had been made under promise of pardon.

Held, that the confession could not be used against the prisoner. There was no law which authorized the Magistrate to return the challan after he had taken cognizance of the case. The course adopted by the police in taking back the challan was illegal as well as unfair to the accused and the confession could be ruled out for that reason alone. If the reasons given by an accused person for having made a confession, which he subsequently withdraws, are, on the face of them, false, it is not apparent why that confession should not be acted on, as it stands and without any further corroboration. One witness had stated that the appellant was beaten before he told the Police what had happened, and the Magistrate stated that the appellant was returned to the Police after making his confession. Further there were details in the confession which conflicted with the evidence for the prosecution. The confession had been retracted on the first possible occasion.

Held, it was not genuine and it is of no value as evidence against the appellant. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Campbell, J.) HARPHUL v. THE CROWN.

Section 165 does not give any authority for the general search of the stolen property but only for specified stolen articles. The new provision of Cl. Where a Magistrate receives a complaint he should either himself examine one or more complainants and take action under S. 202, or if he is taking action on his own knowledge, he should transfer the proceedings completely to another Magistrate so that that Magistrate may proceed to enquiry or trial after recording the statement of the complainant. It is also open to him to make report to police who can take action under S. 167. But so far as can be gathered from provisions of the Code a Magistrate has not the powers of a police officer to investigate and keep an accused person in custody for the purposes of such investigation; custody can only follow where definite charge has been made and complainant has been examined. The mere fact that a private complaint is filed in a Court and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the private complaint does not and cannot deter the police from enquiring into the offences which have been committed and which come to their knowledge not from the complainant party but on information which they secure in the course of their duty from other persons. A charge-sheet then framed by the police is proper and the mere fact that there was a private complaint does not take away the rights of the police to conduct the prosecution. (Devadoss, J.) S. —S. 172—Admissibility.*—List of stolen property—Map prepared by police.

A list of stolen property handed to a Police Officer in the course of investigation is not admissible in evidence and should not be placed before the jury. The admission of such a list however would not of itself vitiate the trial unless it is shown that the accused have been prejudiced by such admission. Where the names of certain persons are sent to the Police as being the names of those who are suspected of being concerned in the commission of an offence and the evidence of the person who supplied these names to the Police is challenged in Court, the list of names supplied by him is admissible in evidence to corroborate his statement. A map which contains upon it certain things which must have been supplied to the Police Officer by some person should not be admitted unless there had been the evidence of the person as to what he said to the officer and the evidence of the Police Officer as to what the person told him. —In the course of an inquiry held under S. 176 by a mahalkari who was invested with powers of a 2nd Class Magistrate by name the District Superintendent of Police reported, imputing a cognizable offence to the Magistrate in the conduct of the enquiry, to the Collector and District Magistrate; the Collector started departmental enquiry and suspended the Magistrate and relieved him of his functions as mahalkari and Magistrate.

Held, that if the Collector was satisfied on perusal of the papers that there was an illegality or an irregularity in the proceedings, under S. 176 he could have reported, to the High Court under S. 438, and the High Court would have passed such orders as it thought fit, but the action of Collector in interfering with the judicial enquiry and virtually putting an end to it was both illegal and improper and that the Magistrate continued to be a 2nd Class Magistrate though he was suspended as mahalkari, as the power of suspending the Magistrate was given only to Local Government by S. 26. —S. 179—Applicability.

The provisions under Chap. 15-A are not separately independent of one another so that if one provision applied, the other would not so apply; and consequently merely because there are certain provisions with regard to place of inquiry, in a case of criminal breach of trust under S. 181 (2) it does not follow that S. 179 would not apply to that enquiry. S. 179 does cover that offence as also cheating under S. 408, Penal Code: 19 All. 111, Rel. on.; 32 All. 397; 35 All. 29; A. I. R. 1924 All. 77, Ref.; 34 All. 487, Dist. (Dalal, J.) S. F. RICH v. —Although loss to the principal or employer may be the usual and the normal result of criminal breach of trust, it is neither the necessary ingredient nor even the necessary consequence of the offence of criminal breach of trust. It is the act itself which in law amounts to the offence apart from any such consequence and therefore the jurisdiction to try an offence of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust is governed by S. 181 (2) and not by S. 179. Further, if there is a further duty enjoined upon the agent or the factor to render accounts at another place, the failure in rendering such accounts or rendering false accounts at such place does not confer jurisdiction under S. 179 upon the Magistrate at latter place. 46 Bom. 641. ## CR. P. CODE (1898),

—S. 179—Essentials.

—What S. 179 provides is that when a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of two things; by reason, first, of anything which has been done, and secondly of any consequence which has ensued, then jurisdiction is conferred on the Court the act has been done or the consequence has ensued. The offence therefore must be charged by reason of the two things, the act done and the consequence which ensued; and the consequence therefore forms the necessary part of the offence. S. 179 does not refer to an offence charged by reason of an act done, from which any consequence has ensued. (Beaumont, C. J. and Madhavkar and Baker, JJ.) JIVANDAS SAVCHAND, In re. 1930 Cr. ## —S. 179—Misappropriation.

—Place of entrustment of pro notes for collection.

An accused, an employee in a firm of Rangoon, was entrusted with a number of pro-notes and hundis of different values with instructions to proceed up-country (Burma) and collect the amounts due upon them at the various places where the firms concerned were situated, and the accused tendered a final cash account at Rangoon. It was found out that he had misappropriated to his personal expenses a certain sum out of this collections. It was contended that the misappropriation took place in the districts and the subject of the offence was the money and not the hundis or pro-notes, and, therefore, Rangoon Courts had no jurisdiction to try the accused for misappropriation.

Held, that the Rangoon Courts had jurisdiction to deal with this matter. The promissory notes were entrusted to the accused in Rangoon and the accused must account for them in Rangoon. (Das, J.) YACOOB AHMAD v. V. M. ABDUL GANNY.

The accused was employed at L under an agreement to work for a firm at K and had to remit moneys and render periodical accounts to the Head Office of the firm in K. He misappropriated money of the firm while at L.

Held, that K Court had jurisdiction to try the accused.

Per Wild, J. C.—The word "consequence" in S. 179 should be given its ordinary meaning and should not be restricted to mean a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. The alleged fact that wrongful loss was caused at K which is the headquarters of the firm gave the Court at K jurisdiction to try the case as the loss was a consequence of the offence alleged to have been committed at L within the meaning of S. 179.

Per Aston, A. J. C.—An agent whose duty it is to have certain funds or accounts delivered at a certain place, commits the offence at that place, if he fraudulently misappropriates the funds having omitted to remit them and having omitted to account for them, and therefore, apart from the provisions of S. 179, S. 181 would apply, the facts complained of amounting to an offence committed in K. The goods were to be delivered at Calcutta and payment was to be made at Delhi. Held, that the offence was complete as soon as he misappropriated the goods by selling them without authority at Calcutta. The complainant who carried on business at Lyallpur had employed the accused M as agent of his firm to sell goods at Karachi. The contract of agency was entered into at Lyallpur, and it appeared that the agent was to remit the sale proceeds and to send his accounts to the complainant at Lyallpur. The principal preferred a complaint against the agent charging him with the commission of an offence under S. 408. Held that property was received or retained by the accused at Karachi and that the offence if any was committed at that place and that the Lyallpur Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. For the application of S. 179 it is essential that the offence should depend on an act done and on a consequence which has ensued. Loss to one person though a normal result of an act of misappropriation by another, is not an essential ingredient of the offence of criminal misappropriation. The offence is complete if the conversion is done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the offender irrespective of any loss which may ensue to any other person. The offence does not depend on the consequence which has ensued but on the act which has been done and therefore the offence is triable where the conversion takes place and the accused intends wrongful gain to himself and falls under S. 181 (1). 44 C. 912, Foll. The offence of criminal misappropriation is triable only by the Court within the limits of whose jurisdiction the misappropriation took place.

A partner, bound under the articles of partnership to manage the business at Rangoon and forward weekly accounts to the head office at Bombay, misappropriated the firm's moneys at Rangoon and sent false accounts to Bombay. Held, (i) The offence was committed at Rangoon and the Bombay Courts had no jurisdiction. (ii) The accounts submitted at Bombay were only evidence of the commission of the offence and could not confer jurisdiction. (iii) The consequent loss to the principal was not a part of the offence. —Place of actual receipt or retention is the test—Intention not material.

It is not essential, under S. 181, Sub-S. (2), that at the time the property is said to be received or retained by the accused person he must have a dishonest intention to misappropriate it or to commit criminal breach of trust with reference to it. It is enough for the purposes of the section if the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused at a particular place to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place to try the case, even if the property was received quite properly and innocently, at that place, and was subsequently dealt with at another place dishonestly. 38 Mad. 779 and A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 49 Dist.

—What amounts to.

The mere fact that previous to the making of the written complaint the Magistrate happened to be in the village and the complainant related the story of the offence to him orally and he inspected the locality, would not bring the case within the purview of sub-clause (c) of the section, and if the same Magistrate starts the proceedings on the written complaint, the case would fall under S. 190 (1) (a) and S. 191 would not apply. —Use of—By Magistrates.

Where the police find on enquiry a complaint to be false the complainant can place the matter before a Magistrate under Sub S. 1 (a) of S. 190. But where the Magistrate has already taken cognizance of an offence, if where the charge sheet is placed before the Magistrate, the police officer as the prosecution medium, omits the names of certain persons whose participation in the offence had up to that time been before the Magistrate, the Magistrate is not compelled in any way to follow what is after all no more than an advice tendered by the prosecuting authority. Without giving reasons, however, he should not differ from the advice. Once having taken cognizance of the offence the Magistrate is strictly independent of any opinion which the police offer to him, and he can order that any persons accused as being participators in the offence should be produced before him, to undergo the preliminary enquiry, or for trial in cases which do go to a higher tribunal for trial. If this were not the law the police would be in possession of powers which might be subject to the gravest abuse. As a matter of procedure the proper course in such a case would be for the Magistrate simply to call upon the Police to bring forward a charge sheet against those who the Magistrate thinks ought to be brought before him. Where with regard to an offence which has been the subject of police report and has not been finally disposed of by a Magistrate, a District Magistrate thinks it necessary to continue proceedings against the accused it is more regular for him to withdraw the pending case to his own file under S. 528, rather than to begin separate proceedings by taking cognizance of the same offences under S. 190 (1) (c). 5 C. —There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure to restrain the Sub-Divisional Magistrate from taking action in respect of an offence which he thinks has been committed but which has not been brought to his notice in the form of a complaint. S. 190 (c) gives very wide powers to the Magistrate. What is intended thereby is that the Magistrate should be able to bring his experience to bear upon any statement of facts made to him by an aggrieved person who might not know what his legal remedy was in the given circumstances. Where the person aggrieved made a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to take action against A and B under Ss. 107 or 145, Cr. P. Code, and did not allege in his petition that any offence had been committed by A and B and the Magistrate passed the following order. “This is a case under Ss. 447 and 352, I. P. C., and is transferred to the Court of the Tahsildar,” and the Tahsildar tried A and B and ultimately convicted them under Ss. 352 and 447, I. P. C.

Held, that the Magistrate was acting within his jurisdiction when he read the statement as being a complaint of facts, which constituted an offence, and even if the definition of “complaint” would rule out the application of Cl. (a), S. 190, the Magistrate was certainly able to take cognizance of the offence under Cl. (c). (Pullan, J.) SARFARAZ v. EMPEROR. 7 O. W. N. 792 = 1930 Cr. C. 1164 = A. I. R. 1930 Oudh 500.

Held, that the procedure, though not illegal, was not suitable. The magistrate should either commit A to the Sessions Court or, if he is not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing him to the Sessions Court, should discharge him, and that further proceedings should not be taken against M until A is either convicted, acquitted, or discharged. —Non-cognizable case.

The petitioner made a statement to the Village Munsif that a dacoity was committed in his house and mentioned certain persons as having taken part in the dacoity. The Village Munsif forwarded the complaint to the Police, who held an investigation and referred the case as false. The Sub-magistrate to whom the papers were sent, accepted the referred charge-sheet and struck the case off his file. The police put in a charge sheet before the Sub-Divisional magistrate against the petitioner for an offence under S. 211 I. P. C. The Sub-Divisional magistrate transferred the case to the Second Class magistrate who had acted on the referred charge-sheet in the alleged dacoity case.

Held, that this was not a case in which the police could start proceedings of their own accord. The offence under S. 211 is a non-cognizable one and the Police were not empowered to investigate into a non-cognizable offence and charge the petitioner. It was open either to the accused in the alleged dacoity case or to the Village Munsif, or any Police officer to prefer complaint under S. 190, Cr. P. Code, in which case the magistrate before whom the complaint is made might take the case on his file after taking a sworn statement from the complainant. Application was made to the District Magistrate praying for action to be taken under S. 145 of the Code. On a complaint being filed before the Sub-Divisional Officer, the complainant was examined and police was ordered to submit a report. The police submitted a final report stating that the case was maliciously false and filed a complaint for the prosecution of the complainant under S. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Divisional Officer did not take cognizance of the case under S. 211 but merely asked the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. At the same time the complainant put in a petition impugning the police report and praying for an enquiry by a Judicial Officer. The complainant was directed to adduce evidence. His witnesses, however, were not present on the day fixed and he prayed for time. The case was thereupon adjourned, but on the adjournment date the following order was passed: "Witnesses were present. To Mr. Q. (a Deputy Magistrate) for disposal" Mr. Q. did not examine any of the witnesses being of opinion that it would be a waste of time to do so. But on looking into the police report and hearing the pleader of the complainant he directed the investigating officer to submit a charge-sheet in the case. Subsequently the Sub-Divisional Officer purported to re-call the case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate and make it over to another Deputy Magistrate with certain instructions as to how he should proceed.

Held, the order transferring the case to the Deputy Magistrate was under S. 192 and the whole case was transferred. The Deputy Magistrate had full seisin of the case and Sub-Divisional Officer could not re-call the case for the reasons shown in his order or transfer it to another Deputy Magistrate, much less with instructions as to how he should deal with the case. The order of the Sub-Divisional Officer transferring the case to another Magistrate as well as the order of the Deputy Magistrate asking for a charge-sheet from the police should be set aside. To hold in such a case that although a private person was barred from prosecuting for fabricating false evidence, he would still be at liberty to prosecute for fraud would mean that the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b), Cr. The complainant, who was not party to a suit in which the document was filed, filed the petition asking the Court to direct a prosecution of the accused under various sections including Ss. 471 and 474 of Penal Code. That petition was rejected by the Court and the appeal to the District Judge was dismissed. Thereafter the complainant filed another complaint, a complaint of an offence under S. 474. The accused was put upon his trial and was convicted and sentenced.

Certain criminal case in which K was on one side and R on the other ended in a compromise. In these proceedings a certified copy of a municipal plan had been filed on behalf of R. The copy was taken out by a person identified as R by a pleader N. R made an application to the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking for enquiry into the matter, his complaint being that K and others had tampered with the original plan and had taken out the certified copy by giving a false receipt and on false identification by N. The Chief Presidency Magistrate, after examining R, issued warrant against K under Ss. 417, 419, 430 and 109, Penal Code.

Held, that the offences were not committed by parties to any proceedings in Court while the said proceedings were pending in respect of documents produced or given in evidence in such proceedings. The offences were committed long after the proceedings had terminated and S. 195 did not operate as a bar to the cognizance of the offences. The allegations made in the complaint of R were such as must be inquired into. (C. C. Ghose and Pearson, J.J.) KARTICK CHANDRA v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 358 = 127 I. C. 287 = 51 Cr. L. J. 51 =

Court under S. 195 (c) includes a successor in office of the Magistrate before whom an offence is committed; therefore, when an offence is committed in respect of which sanction is required, before a particular Magistrate presiding the Court, his successor in office can make a complaint in respect of that offence. The same thing applies to a Court of Naib Tahsildar in Punjab, as by Punjab Government Notification No. 1536, dated 8th November 1889, all Naib Tahsildars are ex officio created Magistrates of the 3rd Class. 25 P. by the word "includes," which suggests that the term "Court" is intended to be a wider expression than a "civil, revenue or criminal Court." If it had not a wider meaning, it was wholly unnecessary to say "but does not include a registrar or sub-registrar etc."

Per Daniels, J.—It seems doubtful whether the Legislature, in substituting the word "includes" for "means" in S. 195 (2), really intended to widen the definition. They may have thought that to say that the term "Court" means "a Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court but does not include a registrar or Sub-Registrar", implies that "registrar or sub-registrar" would be a Court unless specially excepted from the definition. The word "includes" in an enactment is not always of a wider significance than the word "means." 1899 App. Cas. 99, Rel. on. (Sulaman and Daniels, J.J.)

—Offence committed in relation to any proceeding in any court.

The applicant purchased a house from one R. The sale-deed contained recitals alleged to be untrue and prejudicial to the rights of D. the owner of a neighbouring house. D filed a suit against the applicant for a declaration that the recitals were false and fraudulent. The Court passed a decree which involved a finding that the recitals in the sale-deed were incorrect. D then moved the court to take proceedings against the applicant for forgery, etc., under S. 476, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that Ss. 476 and 195 (1) (d) did not apply and that the applicant could be prosecuted by the aggrieved person without the intervention of the Civil Court. —"In" and "in relation to" explained.

The words "in" and "in relation to" mean that an offence may be committed by a person in relation to a judicial proceeding though he may not be a party to the proceeding or though it may not have been committed by that person in a judicial proceeding. —"Authority".

Whether the police are public servants subordinate to the District Magistrate under S. 195 (1) (a) or not, there is no reason to doubt that the very wide expression in S. 195 (5) "any authority to which such public servant is subordinate" connoting apparently a more distant and general entity than departmental superior, covers the District Magistrate in relation to the police of his district. —"Offence"—Non-parties not affected

When an offence of forgery is committed by more than one person, and one of them at least is a party to the proceeding in which the document is produced, such participants in the forgery as are not parties to the proceeding may be prosecuted otherwise than under the provisions of Ss. 195 and 476, Cr. P. Code. The term "offence" used in S. 195 (1) (c) refers only to the share taken in the transaction by a party. The power therefore, to proceed against non-parties is not affected.

The term "offence" as used in Cl. (c), denotes the transaction of forgery as a whole, so that the Court is debarred from taking cognizance of that transaction including the shares taken in it by non-parties as well as parties, and does not refer merely to the share taken by a party so that the power to proceed against non-parties is not affected. 12 Bom. —"Produced or given in evidence."

The words "produced or given in evidence" in S. 195 (c), Cr. P. Code, do not limit the procedure under that section to a limited class of user within the wider class contemplated by S. 471. The word "or" which intervenes between the word "produced" and the words "given in evidence" shows that it is disjunctive and that the procedure is applicable not only in cases where the document has been given in evidence but also in cases where it has been produced and the ambit of the word "produced" is very wide. —"In relation to any proceeding".

It requires the complaint of the Court not only in respect of certain offence committed in the proceedings in the Court but in relation to any proceedings in the Court. The expression "in relation to any proceedings" is very general and is wide enough to cover a proceeding in contemplation before a criminal Court though the proceedings may not have commenced when the offence was committed. —"Produced in evidence".

Where a party to a proceeding hands up a document to the Judge who does not take the document of the file but returns it to the party, the document is "produced" in the proceeding, within the meaning of S. 195 (c). —Words in section should be given wide interpretation.

The words of S. 195 (d) should be given as wide an application as possible. Some of the offences enumerated in the clause are capable of being committed in relation to a judicial proceeding which did not exist. False evidence, for instance, may be fabricated for a contemplated suit or property may be fraudulently concealed in contemplation of an execution proceeding. The clause applies if judicial proceeding is in existence at the time when it is sought to prosecute the offender for the offence in question. If two offences are even remotely connected by the relationship of cause and effect, then the first may be said to have been committed in relation to the second. It may be that the commission of the latter offence may never have been intended, but if it is in fact the consequence of the former offence, then S. 195 applies. —Sanction—Refusal of revocation—Time runs from date of sanction.

The opposite party obtained a sanction under S. 195, Cr. P. Code for the prosecution of the applicant under S. 471, I. P. C., but no action was taken for some months and the applicant applied to have the order of sanction revoked and this application was rejected. Held, that the sanction cannot possibly be said to have been given by the Court which did not originally grant the sanction but which merely refused to revoke that sanction when it had been granted and hence six months' period began to run from the date of grant of sanction originally. 40 All. 338, Foll.; 26 M. —Time runs from the granting of sanction—Extension.

The period of six months begins to run from the date of granting of the sanction. The High Court has jurisdiction to extend the time though the period of six months has expired and though the sanction is no longer in force. But in such a case, it ought to be very careful not to extend the time unless it is clearly shown that there is "good cause" for extending the time, within the meaning of the section. (*Sanderson, C. —Conviction after remand by same Magistrate.

There is nothing in the Code which lays down that once a Magistrate declines under S. 476 to file a complaint, he is functus officio, or that a complaint subsequently filed by him confers no jurisdiction to deal with the person complained against. It is hardly open to argument that a refusal by the Magistrate under S. 476, to file a complaint against an accused person, attracts the applicability of the doctrine of autre fois acquit enunciated by S. 403, or that it amounts to judgment within the meaning of Ss. 366 and 369 which may not therefore be subsequently reviewed. —The petitioner had lodged an information of arson before the police. The police reported the charge laid by the petitioner to be false and asked for his prosecution under S. 211, I.P.C. This report was put up before the Magistrate on the 18th July 1927, on which date the Magistrate accepting the police report summoned him under S. 211 of the Code to appear. A week later, the petitioner filed a complaint before the Magistrate protesting against the police investigation and asserting that his case was true and praying that the case against the accused charged by him be proceeded with. The Magistrate ordered to keep the application pending till the decision of the other case against him and the enquiry against the petitioner continued. The Magistrate committed the petitioner to the Court of Sessions.

Held, that the complaint not having been disposed of legally, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence merely upon the police report and he had consequently no jurisdiction to continue the enquiry against the petitioner and to commit him to the Court of Sessions. As the choice of instituting a prosecution is no more placed in the hands of private persons, and no prosecution can be instituted for the offences specified in S. 195 which have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court unless the Court itself prefers a complaint, and the person who is the subject of the complaint has a definite right of appeal to a superior Court against the institution of the complaint, High Court, unless the circumstances are altogether outside the ordinary, will not examine in revision the merits of the complaint with a view to discovering whether it is likely to result in a conviction, nor should the High Court go into the question of public policy as the withdrawal of complaint on that ground would be likely to prejudice the accused in taking away the chance of clearing his character. Under sub-S. (3) the Court of the District Judge is the principal Court having original jurisdiction within the local limits in which a Court of Subordinate Judge exercising powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court is situate and the Court of Subordinate Judge is subordinate to it. Therefore, the District Judge has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge passed under S. 476-B. 20 O. C. 223, Ref.; 1 Pat. L. J. 206 and 2 Pat. L. J. 1, Dist. —Sub-Divisional officer—Subordinate to District Magistrate.

A Sub-Divisional Officer granting sanction under sub-S. (1)(a) is subordinate to the District Magistrate and not the Sessions Judge for purpose of sub S. (5). Sub-S. District Magistrate revoking Sub-Magistrate's sanction to prosecute is not subject to the High Court. Where a Sub-Magistrate grants sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence before him, he acts as a Court, and an appeal from his order lies to the District Magistrate and from his order to the Sessions Judge and to the High Court. A Sub-Magistrate cannot grant sanction to prosecute for false information given to a Village Magistrate as the latter is not subject to his authority as a public servant. District Magistrate revoking Sub-Magistrate's sanction to prosecute under S. 182, Penal Code, acts in his capacity of the executive head of the district and is not therefore subject to the authority of the High Court. Code, in respect of an alleged false accusation by him against another it is a question of fact to be decided in the particular circumstances of that case whether that person made such false accusation in contemplation of proceedings which he intended to take in a Court or not. Where the accused has made a false accusation at the same time in two documents one a petition addressed to the Assistant Superintendent of Police and the other a complaint posted to a Criminal Court it may be fairly presumed that he did so with the object of moving the Criminal Court to take proceedings. The offence committed by him, therefore, falls within the purview of the expression "in relation to criminal proceedings" within the meaning of the above section. (*Percival, J. C. and Rupchand, A. —Incorrect statement of facts—Not invalid.

The provisions in the Anti-Boycott Act requiring the authority of the Government for a prosecution under the Act correspond to those in S. 196 Code of Criminal Procedure, which is less stringent than S. 195. Strictly the "order" or "authority" required by S. 196 is not the same as the "sanction" referred to in S. 195 and the classes of the offences dealt with by the two sections are quite distinct; moreover, in the latter section, there is no provision corresponding to sub-S. (4) of the earlier section. The intention of the legislature was to ensure that no prosecution for an offence falling within S. 196 or under the Anti-Boycott Act should be launched except on a complaint authorised by the Government, and where this intention is given effect to it, is immaterial whether or not all the facts on which the complaint was to be based were stated in the "authority" with meticulous precision. Indeed, it is doubtful if it is even necessary to set out any fact other than the alleged fact that the accused had committed an offence under a certain section of the Act. (May Oung, J.) NGA AUNG HMAN v. KING EMPEROR. 76 I. C. 561 = 2 Bur. L. J. 196 = 25 Cr. L. J. 193 = A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 65.

—No form—Actual words used need not be set out.

The section does not lay down any particular form in which the sanction should be accorded, and sanction must be deemed sufficient if it names the persons to be prosecuted and specifies the sections under which they are alleged to have committed the offence, as also the period of their activity. (See 15 Cal. L. J. 517.) The mere fact that the sanction does not specify the utterances made by the accused or the songs which they are alleged to have recited does not in any way affect its validity. —Immunity—Limits.

The privilege of immunity from prosecution without sanction only extends to acts which can be shown to be in discharge of official duty, or fairly purporting to be in such discharge. An offence arising out of abuse of official position by an act not purporting to be official, does not necessitate sanction under S. 197. (1916) 1 M. W. N. 384, Foll.; 2 Bom. 481, Disappr. —Act done in the course of official duty.

Section 197 (1) should be construed as widely as it is framed; and if it is found that the Judge, Magistrate, or a public servant has committed the act at a time when he was doing (or purporting to do) an official duty, this will be sufficient to attract the provisions of the section. A village Magistrate sent his talayari to fetch the complainant and told him that 'for not appearing when summons was sent, he sentenced him to imprisonment in the chavadi' and confined him in his chavadi. The complainant charged the Magistrate of wrongful confinement.

Held, that sanction under S. 197 was necessary for prosecuting the Magistrate. 17 Cr. L. J. 394, Appr.; 25 Mad. 15; A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 172, not Appr.; 9 Mad. 439, Dist. —Person and place.

Not only the sanction of the Local Government is necessary, but the Local Government has to determine the person by whom and the manner in which the prosecution is to be conducted and may specify the Court before which the trial is to be conducted. —Specification of offence.

In granting a sanction Government need not specify the offences with the same degree of precision as in a charge. Where, throughout the question is only of a single offence, which is otherwise properly described and specified, the sanction is not bad merely because mistake has been committed, in specifying the date of offence by one day. 13 C. Held that R had filed the complaint under the authority of the Municipal Committee and R acted in his capacity of a Municipal Commissioner when he asked for a search warrant and whatever he did, he did as a public servant. Held, that as the complaint did not allege that the accused obtained this advantage to himself by acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty as a Municipal Commissioner or a member of the Sub-Committee, the case did not fall within the provisions of S. 197 and that therefore sanction was not required for his prosecution. —S. 197—Sanction when necessary.

The expression "offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in discharge of his official duties" implies something in nature of an official character attached to the act itself, that act being in fact done as an official act in pursuance of public office held by the public servant. Therefore, in order that S. 197 may be applicable to the complaint of the offence against a public servant it is essential that the criminal act constituting the offence should have been done as an official act or under the cloak of what purported to be an official act. It is not enough that his capacity of public servant put him in position to do the alleged act. (Pearson and Mallick, J.J.) AMANAT ALI v. EMPEROR,

—The procedure which a Magistrate is required to adopt on a complaint being lodged before him is laid down by Ss. 200 to 203. S. 200 of the Code makes it incumbent on a Magistrate to examine the complainant forthwith at sufficient length to satisfy himself as to his veracity and as to any points on which the complaint is silent. If the result of such examination is that he finds no prima facie reason to distrust the complaint, and he is satisfied that the facts alleged before him constitute a criminal offence, it is incumbent on him to issue process forthwith. If, on the other hand, he distrusts the complaint altogether or comes to the conclusion that no offence is made out, it is equally his duty to dismiss the complaint. It is only in a case, where he distrusts the complainant, but his distrust is not sufficiently strong to warrant him to act upon it, that it is open to him to postpone the issue of process pending further inquiry as contemplated by S. 202. 14 Cal. 141, Rel on. ## —S. 200—Complaint by police.

—Examination—Necessity.

A complaint was lodged with the police with regard to an alleged offence under S. 379, I. P. C. An investigation was made and the police reported that the charge against the accused appeared to be false and that the complaint was under S. 379 on the ground that the complainant had some sort of grudge against the accused. On receipt of this report the Magistrate made an endorsement thereon, "False under S. 379. Action should be taken, under S. 211, I. P. C." As a result a complaint was ultimately lodged by the police with the Magistrate.

Held, that in lodging the complaint the police were purporting to act as police officers in the course of their duty even assuming that the duty which police officer in this case had taken upon himself to perform was not a duty which he was bound to perform within S. 200 (a-a); 1 P. By virtue of S. 190 (1) (b) and S. 200 (a-a) Magistrates mentioned in S. 190 are entitled to take cognizance of even non-cognizable offences upon a report made in writing by a Police Officer without examining the officer upon oath. —No rule as to which should proceed first.

The question as to which of the counter cases should proceed first or whether both of them should proceed simultaneously and contemporaneously is one which has to be decided according to circumstances in particular case. No absolute rule of law can be laid down that a particular course must be adopted. A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1260, Ref.

There was a collision between the parties which resulted in the petitioners filing a complaint before the Magistrate against the opposite party under Ss. 147, 447 352, etc., Penal Code, and the opposite party making a similar complaint against the petitioner for similar offences. After recording the petitioner's complaint the trying Magistrate looked into the counter-case in which the information was first lodged with the police and as he found that there were injuries on some persons of the opposite party he directed that the case of the opposite party should proceed and deferred passing any order on the petitioner's complaint.

The principle underlying S. 360, cl. (1) should be made applicable on grounds of public policy to the substance of the examination of the complainant on oath, if the accuracy of the record of such examination is to be vouchsafed, particularly when it is to be utilized as a basis for a possible perjury in future; for it would be unsafe to use against a complainant what on the face of it purports to be only a substance and not the full version of his examination without some such sufficient and adequate safeguards as to its completeness and accuracy. As a written complaint is not verified nor is it required by law to be verified it cannot by itself be used as a basis for prosecution for perjury. But the examination of the complainant under S. 200 being taken on oath and signed by the complainant can be so used though it does not bear any certificate by the Magistrate that the same was read over to the complainant. The evident object of getting this substance of the examination of the complaint signed by him or her is to make use of it in case of need, as against the complainant's subsequent deposition as a witness for starting against him, if need be a prosecution for perjury on the ground that the two statements contradict each other. —Inspector General of Police, Bhopal, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council lodged a complaint in the Court of a Magistrate having two jurisdictions, that of a Headquarters Magistrate and that of a Magistrate exercising jurisdiction over railway lands in Bhopal State. The complaint was against the editor printer and publisher of an Urdu Weekly "Riyasar" for publishing an article tending to excite disaffection towards the Chief of Bhopal State or his Government or Administration in Bhopal. The Magistrate was subordinate to different High Courts in two different jurisdictions. The complainant applied for amplification of his complaint by the inclusion of Itarsi as one of the places of publication of the above offending article. The Magistrate passed the following order. "The result of this petition for amplification will be that the case will henceforward cease to be a railway case for State-administered areas if it was one and be transferred to my ordinary file of criminal cases of this Court. This be done." After this order the accused objected that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear the case as he had transferred a case from a Court subordinate to one High Court to another Court subordinate to the other High Court, which the Governor-General in Council could alone do by a notification in the Gazette of India. Held, that the trying Magistrate in his capacity as the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was incompetent to deal with the complaint of an offence committed at Itarsi but in his capacity as Headquarters Magistrate was competent to do so.

Held further, that as the original papers filed by the complainant contained material clearly amounting to an allegation of publication at Itarsi, the Railway Magistrate for Bhopal was no longer bound to dismiss the complaint in its entirety, he was entitled to return the complaint for presentation to the Court that could try the offence committed at Itarsi and this was in effect what he did. What is ordinarily contemplated by S. 202, Cr. P. —Practice unfair.

The procedure that when a complaint is put in and sworn to, the Magistrate, without hearing the complainant's case or his witnesses, should issue notice to the accused to appear and show cause against the issue of process, hear what the accused has to say, examine any witness he wishes to have examined and then decide whether the complaint shall be received or not, though not prohibited by the letter of S. 202, is clearly contrary to the spirit of that section and to the general principles of the Code. It is a procedure most unfair to the accused. He is in effect compelled not only to state, but to substantiate his defence, before the prosecution has substantiated any case against him, and this is the exact opposite of the principle underlying the prescribed procedure. 37 Mad. 181, Foll. Also, the procedure is no less unfair to the prosecution. (Wallace, J.) VARADARAJULU NAIDU v. KUPPUSWAMI NAIDU. 99 I. C. 321 = 49 Mad. 926 = 28 Cr. L. J. 113 = 7 A. I. Cr. B. 273 = A. I. —Procedure is condemnable.

The procedure of calling upon an accused person to render an explanation to enable the Magistrate to decide if he should issue process is condemnable. It is not fair to the accused that he should be called upon to state his defence before the prosecution have laid all their cards on the table. Though there is no obligation on him either to appear or to render an explanation in the preliminary inquiry a refusal or failure on his part to attend in answer to a rule nisi issued by a Magistrate is likely to prejudice the mind of the Magistrate and a compliance therewith to expose him to serious risks.

—S. 202—Object and scope.*—Explanation as to.

An enquiry or an investigation under S. 202 is designed to afford the Magistrate an opportunity of either confirming or removing such hesitation as he may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the enquiry varies with the circumstances of each case and it is certainly not contemplated that it should always be exhaustive. Frequently all that is required is the elucidation of some minor point or the summary determination of the sufficiency of the available evidence, but least of all is the enquiry—a preliminary trial of the accused at which he is entitled to adduce his evidence before process can issue upon him. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and the depth of the enquiry is entirely in discretion of the Magistrate (so long at least as he confines himself to the simple question of issue of process or dismissal of the complaint). The provision is enabling and not obligatory. As soon as he has satisfied himself that process should issue its object is fulfilled and it is certainly not incumbent upon him or ordinarily expedient that he should practically enter upon a trial of the case. —It is perfectly open to a Magistrate who is asked to set in motion S. 107 to avail himself of the help which is available to him under S. 202, when complaint of an offence of which he is authorized to take cognizance is made to him. Apart from S. 202 it is competent to a Magistrate to refer the matter to the police, and the police are entitled to hold the investigation, and it is the duty of the complainant to assist in the investigation, and so any statement made by the complainant during the investigation is absolutely privileged. It is open to the Magistrate to investigate into the matter in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the complaint in any way he thinks proper. The enquiry contemplated by S. 202 is not limited to any particular form of enquiry. The Magistrate is at perfect liberty to look into the police records and if he is satisfied that the complaint is groundless can dismiss the complaint. (Kulwant Sahay, J.) RAMAUD LAL v. —S. 202—Procedure.*—Courses open—Detention in custody—Not power.

Where a Magistrate receives a complaint, he should either himself examine one or more complaints and take action under S. 202, or if he is taking action on his own knowledge he should transfer the proceedings completely to another Magistrate so that Magistrate may proceed to enquiry or trial after recording the statement of the complainant. It is also open to him to make report to police who can take action under S. 167. But so far as can be gathered from provisions of the Code, a Magistrate has not the powers of a police-officer to investigate and keep an accused person in custody for the purposes of such investigation; custody can only follow where definite charge has been made and complainant has been examined. —Personal knowledge.

There is nothing which prohibits a person to whom a complaint is sent for enquiry under S. 202 from importing his own personal knowledge into it or examining witnesses whom he knows to be able to throw light on the matter: A. —Police can only report.

When a Magistrate has referred a complaint for investigation under S. 202, the police are not entitled after investigation to send up the accused for trial under a charge-sheet as if they had taken cognizance of the case under their ordinary powers of investigation. The only action they can take is to make a report to the Magistrate: A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 24, Foll.; 8 Bom. L. R. 589, Dist.; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 74, Appl. Where a Magistrate instead of either disposing of the case himself or referring it for investigation, partly investigated the matter himself and had it partly investigated by a police-officer and did not state in writing his reasons for referring the matter to the police-officer:

Held, that procedure adopted was not in accordance with the provisions of S. 202. (Fford, J.) JAGINDAR SINGH v. AGHA SAFFDAR ALI KHAN.

111 I. C. 878 = 29 Cr. L. J. 958 = A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 88.

—Complaint not a first information.

Having once taken cognizance on a complaint, the Magistrate cannot act otherwise than under Ss. 200 to 203, Cr. P. Code. He can direct the police to make an inquiry under S. 202, but he cannot direct the police to treat the complaint as first information. (Jwala Prasad, J.) ULFAT KHAN v. EMPEROR. 108 I. —It is certainly not a correct procedure to defer the issue of process and order an enquiry without recording reasons. It is also as a rule undesirable that the enquiry should be prolonged by cross-examination and arguments inter partes, the reason being that if this is necessary it is obviously advisable to follow the procedure of a trial and for that purpose to issue process at once. At the same time if a Magistrate having the duty of making an enquiry under S. 202 can make his enquiry more complete and can inform himself of the facts more fully, by having the accused in Court, there is no reason either in common sense or in law why the accused should not be called to the enquiry. (Foster, J.) RAM SARAN SINGH v. MAHAM-MAD JAN KHAN. 89 I. C. 706 = 7 P. L. T. 36 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1394 = A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 34.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 202—Procedure.

Accused—No Right to be present.

The accused has no right to be present while a Magistrate is holding an enquiry under S. 202. It may often be a matter of convenience both to allow the accused to be present and to allow any legal adviser to watch the proceedings. But the grant of such a concession is on the part of the Magistrate a mere act of grace and the accused has no innate right to it. Proceedings under S. 202 are not proceedings inter partes but they are instituted and conducted by the Magistrate in order that he may be able to satisfy himself whether there is or whether there is not any ground for issuing process, and it is not until process is issued that the matter becomes a case. It is, therefore, obviously irregular and most often extremely troublesome to allow legal advisers of persons against whom there is a complaint to cross-examine witnesses or to allow legal advisers of complainant to examine witnesses. (Kincaid, J. C. and Kennedy, A. J. C.) ATMARAM UDHOWDAS v. TOPANDAS. 93 I. C. 894 = 20 S. L. R. 43 = 27 Cr. L. J. 494 = A. I. R. 1926 Sind 188.

Presence of accused irregular—Further enquiry—Powers.

Holding an enquiry under S. 202, Cr. P. Code, while the accused were before the Magistrate by pleader, though they had not been summoned, and their arguments were heard is a procedure highly condemnable. The Sessions Judge cannot when ordering a further enquiry in respect of a complaint which has been dealt with by the Magistrate under S. 202, Cr. P. Code direct that the accused be summoned. The revising officer may direct that by way of further inquiry he shall cause an investigation to be made, or if one has been made which he considers insufficient or unsatisfactory or if he considers that the complainant has not been sufficiently examined, may order that the complainant be recalled and his examination continued. But a further inquiry cannot be ordered in any but one of these three cases. The inquiry is preliminary to the issue of process and the next step to take, if the inquiry as far as collection of materials is complete, is the issue of process. 15 Cal. 608, Foll. Recording of evidence.

Where the Magistrate, in an enquiry under S. 202 did not record the statements of witnesses but he had before him the final report of the police a detailed account of the statements of the witnesses before the police and the witnesses repeated the same statements before him.

Held, that it cannot be asserted that there has been an error of law since the Code makes no provision with regard to the manner in which the evidence in an inquiry under S. 202 should be recorded. The case would be different had the deposition of any witness deviated from the record of the previous statements. (Macpherson, J.) TILAKDHARI SINGH v. MISRI SINGH. 89 I. C. 386 = 3 Pat. L. R. S. 202—Revision.*Inadequate enquiry.

On refusal of Process—Notice unnecessary.

There is nothing in the Code to make it necessary for a superior Court to give any notice to any person against whom a Magistrate has refused to issue process under S. 202, when proceedings are being taken to revise that order. Although one Magistrate may refuse to issue process another Magistrate may do so and process may thus be issued without the necessity of upsetting the order of the first Magistrate. The view that once any Magistrate has refused to issue process that gives such criminal immunity from all processes for ever, would be perverse. (Kennedy, J. C. and Tyabji, A. J. C.) L. A. S. 202—Summons.*Complaint by public servant.

Where a public servant acting in discharge of his duties makes a complaint to the Magistrate under S. 211, Penal Code, it is open to the Magistrate to issue summons without any notice to accused if on reading the complaint he found sufficient ground for proceeding or to proceed under S. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. (Macpherson, J.) PARMANAND BRAHMACHARI v. EMPEROR. 116 I. C. 46 = 10 P. L. T. 618 = 12 A. I. Cr. R. 427 = 1930 Cr. C. 6 = 30 Cr. L. J. 554 = A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 30.

No reasons—irregularity.

Per Graham, J.—Section 202 requires that reasons should be given when the issue of process is postponed. But the failure to do so would at most be an irregularity and would not justify the setting aside of an order for issue of search warrant. (Mukerji and Graham, J. J.) AJOY KRISHNA v. S. G. Inquiry after process.

If a Magistrate asks the police to make an enquiry under S. 156(3) after he has issued process to the accused, his order is without jurisdiction and the police enquiry started under such an order is illegal. (1911) 2 M. W. N. 74, Foll.

But the mere fact that the Magistrate orders issue of process to complainant, accused and prosecution witnesses, does not take away from him the power to direct the police to enquire into the case. Magistrate dismissed the complaint under S. 203—In a revision against the order, the Sessions Judge, after notice to the accused and hearing them, ordered further enquiry.

Held, that the accused persons have no locus standi in enquiries under Chap. 16, and the Sessions Judge's action in issuing notice to the accused is improper, if not illegal. (Wallace, J.) RAMABHADRA ODAYAR v. EMPEROR. 1 M. Cr. C. 313 = 29 Cr. L. J. 1059 =

—For witnesses.

In the case of non-cognizable warrant cases, neither the complainant nor the accused can be compelled to pay process fees for the production of witnesses although the complainant must, under S. 204 in the ordinary course of events, pay process-fees for the summoning of the accused. —To secure accused's presence for judgment—Not proper.

It is nowhere laid down in the Code that the complainant must file a process fee to enforce the attendance of the accused not on the date of trial nor on the date of arguments but on the date fixed for delivery of judgment.

Where on the date fixed for delivery of judgment in a summons case the complainant was present but the accused was absent and the Magistrate had ordered the complainant to file a process fee to secure the attendance of the accused, but the complainant did not file the process fee required, and the case was dismissed for default of prosecution and accused was acquitted.

—S. 204—Discretion.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 204—Legality.

When there are competing complaints it is manifestly within the discretion of the Magistrate on a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case to determine in which he should issue process first and not less so when he has made an enquiry under S. 202 in one of them which necessarily involves also consideration of the other. —Caution necessary.

Except as otherwise provided by statute, anybody is entitled to prefer a complaint in a Criminal Court, and in India, where the Grand Jury system does not exist as an additional shield to innocent persons against whom unfounded complaints are laid in a Criminal Court, it is specially necessary that caution and discretion should be used in issuing summonses. An accused person ought not to be dragged off to answer a charge merely because a complaint has been lodged against him.

In determining whether process ought to issue, a Magistrate must proceed according to the provisions of the Code, and if, after carrying out the instructions therein contained, he is of opinion upon the materials before him that a prima facie case has been made out, he ought to issue process, and in such circumstances he is not entitled to refuse to issue process merely because he thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction.

In each case the Magistrate, in deciding whether process should issue, must exercise a judicial discretion having regard to the materials duly placed before him. (Page and Mukerji, J.J.) SUBAL CHANDRA v. AHADULLA SHEIKH. 95 I. C. 388 = 53 Cal. 606 =

Complaint was dismissed under S. 203. Order of dismissal was set aside and further enquiry was ordered by the Sessions Judge. The Magistrate issued notice to the accused under S. 204 without any evidence being added to the evidence which he had already rejected.

Held, that the action of the Magistrate may not be illegal but was very undesirable. The enquiry under Chap. 16, and that the notice issued under S. 204 ought to be cancelled. (Wallace, J.) RAMABHADRA ODAYAR v. EMPEROR. 112 I. C. 563 = 1 M. Cr. C. 513 =

—Right of—Exercise—Limits.

The provisions of chapters dealing with enquiry into cases triable by Court of Sessions and those relating to summons cases and warrant cases are not interchangeable and provisions appearing in a particular chapter relating to "trial" cannot safely be imported into that relating to "enquiry". The wording of Cl. 2, S. 208, does not lend support to the view that it assumes that the accused shall be at liberty to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution after all the witnesses have been examined in-chief. A Magistrate may be justified in allowing the accused even in a trial under Chap. 18, to reserve cross-examination for a future occasion in the special circumstances of a case and in the interests of justice. That will, however, not be under any express enactment but in the exercise of the inherent power of the Court in administering justice. But the Magistrate is justified in refusing a prayer for cross-examination of prosecution witnesses when the defence had declined to cross-examine them after the examination-in-chief of each was over. 36 Cal. 48, Diss. from; 39 Cal. 885, Diss. from; 5 C. —Should not be lengthy.

Where in committal proceedings the trial was being unduly delayed by long cross-examination, the Magistrate was not justified in allowing long cross-examination of witnesses as he had only to find whether there was a prima facie case for committing to the Sessions or not. Where a Magistrate allowed accused to obtain copies of statements of prosecution witnesses under S. 162 but refused to adjourn the case for giving time to accused to obtain copies and then to allow cross-examination.

—Right to postpone.

The ordinary rule as laid down in the Evidence Act is that the witnesses will be examined in chief, cross-examined and re-examined. There is no express provision for postponing the cross-examination of witnesses till all the prosecution witnesses are examined in chief. A special provision has been made under certain circumstances with respect to trials in warrant cases (Chap. 21) entitling the accused to postpone the cross-examination of witnesses till a certain stage. No such provision has been made with respect to an inquiry into the cases triable by a Court of Sessions in Chap. 18 of the Code. The Magistrate, however, has the discretion to allow the accused to postpone the cross-examination of witnesses in suitable circumstances. He cannot of course throw any obstacle in the exercise of the liberty by an accused to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. (Jwala Prasad and Macpherson, J.J.) SASDAT MIAN v. —Postponement for copies—Principle.

It is advisable for the Magistrate holding an inquiry under Chap. 18 to indicate when directing under the proviso that a copy of a witness's statement to the police be furnished to the accused, whether the contradictions between that statement and the deposition of the witness are or are not so important as to render it expedient to postpone the cross-examination of the witness under S. 208 (2). If the defence is informed forthwith that the contradictions, if any, are not material, the mere grant of a copy of the statement of the witness to the police will not be any ground for failure on the part of the accused to avail himself forthwith of the liberty to cross-examine the witness then accorded to him. Further where the evidence is conflicting and lays itself open to suspicion but where it may be true, and may commend itself to certain tribunals, the Magistrate, even though he may have reason to doubt whether if he were trying the case, he would convict, has no right to substitute his judgment for the final judgment of the Court indicated by law for the trial, and to arrive at a final decision dismissing the case. —Principles governing.

What the enquiring Magistrate has got to try and determine is not whether the case has been made out but only whether there is a case for trial. There is always a case for trial when the evidence is of such a nature that the guilt of the accused can be held to be proved or disproved only as the result of the valuing and the weighing of the evidence. But if the evidence be of such a nature that no reasonable person and no tribunal, Judge or Jury would ever on that evidence hold the accused guilty, it follows that there is no case for trial and it is then a case for the enquiring Magistrate to discharge. 15 Cr. L. J. 373; 1915 M. W. N. 233, Foll. 10 L. W. 630, Dist. (Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.)

 A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1061

Unreliable evidence.

A Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry should not commit a person for trial if he is of opinion that notwithstanding direct evidence, the evidence is unreliable and the case is improbable and a preliminary enquiry made by him in a case triable by Sessions Court is not beyond his jurisdiction if he examined the credibility of the testimony. (Ross, J.) MUNSHI MANDER v. KARU MANDER. 81 I. C. 913 = 6 P. L. T. 146 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1089 = A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 279.

S. 209—Committing.*Magistrate—Duties.

A Magistrate is competent to consider the credibility and weigh the probabilities of the evidence. If he finds that there is no prima facie case against the accused he should discharge him. But in a matter of reasonable doubt, he must not rely upon his own opinion; in fact, he must not encroach upon the functions of a Court of trial. Furthermore, he must keep before him the question whether there are fair grounds for concluding that the accused is guilty upon the evidence. In other words, where there is a prima facie case, upon evidence reasonably credible by Court of trial, he should commit. In all cases, whether a Magistrate discharges or commits, he should give his reasons for so doing, and it will be proper to consider these reasons when deciding whether he has exercised his discretion correctly. Case-law discussed. (Otter, J.) MAUNG HTIN GYAW v. MAUNG PO SEIN. 4 Rang. 471 = 99 I. C. 1019 = 28 Cr. L. J. 219 = 7 A. I. Cr. R. 373 = A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 74.

S. 209—Conviction and commitment.*Grounds—Distinction.

The intention of the Legislature clearly is to make a distinction between grounds for conviction and grounds for committing for trial. Satisfactory proof of the guilt of the accused is the ground for conviction. Satisfactory evidence to go to trial must be regarded as the ground for committing for trial. (Srinivasa Ayyangar, J.) M. MANICKA PADAYACHI, In re. 90 I. C. 530 = 49 M. L. J. 155 = 48 Mad. 874 = 22 M. L. W. 755 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1570 = A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1061.

S. 209—Discretion.

Case triable by First Class Magistrate as well as by Sessions—Commitment is discretionary.

Where a case is triable by Sessions as well as by First Class Magistrate, Magistrate has a discretion to commit the case or to try it himself. In view of the maximum sentence, however, which the Magistrate cannot inflict, a commitment would only be justifiable on very special grounds. Where a Magistrate in his discretion considered that a commitment would result in an unwarrantable waste of public time without any advantage to anybody.

Held, that he exercised a sound discretion in rejecting the idea of commitment to the Sessions. (Macpherson, J.) B. N. RY. CO. LTD., SHAIKH v. MAKBUK.

S. 209—Examination of the accused—Object of.

In both Ss. 209 and 342, the examination of the accused is stated to be "for enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him". It is not proper for the Court in examining the accused to seek in any way to entrap him into admissions which may fill gaps in the prosecution case but the answers given to the accused in answer to straightforward questions put by the Court may no doubt be taken into consideration for convicting the accused under S. 342 (3). S. 209—Grounds for discharge.*False evidence.

It is the duty of the Magistrate when enquiring into a Sessions case, to consider whether the evidence is credible or not; and though in case of doubt he may be justified in leaving it for the jury to decide, when he is convinced that the evidence is false, it is his duty to discharge the accused. No foundation for the charge.

It is not correct to say if the prosecution makes statements which if accepted at their face value might make out a case against the accused he is bound to commit him to Sessions even though he is satisfied that no grounds for so doing exist and that the charge is a baseless one. It is now settled law that if a Magistrate is satisfied that the charge is without foundation and that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial he is entitled and indeed it is his duty to discharge him. No prima facie case.

The District Magistrate cannot commit the accused for the trial to the Sessions relying on the judgments of the Civil Court by reversing the order of a Deputy Magistrate dismissing a complaint where the Deputy Magistrate disbelieves the witnesses who were cross-examined in his presence. The Deputy Magistrate is entitled to form his opinion about the credibility of the witnesses though he is not bound to closely criticise the evidence. If a prima facie case is made out he should leave the case to the jury at the Sessions to form their own view of the credibility of the evidence. In every other case, he is entitled to discharge the accused. (Graques and Panton, J.J.) TARAPADA BISWAS v. KALIPADA GHOSH. 83 I. C. 677 =

—A Magistrate of the first class acquitted certain persons who were charged before him under Ss. 424 and 506 (1) of the Penal Code. The complainant afterwards made several applications to the Magistrate to frame a charge against the accused under S. 305 of the Penal Code and commit the accused to Sessions. The Magistrate recorded the applications but declined to entertain them. Upon this the District Magistrate was moved by the complainant and acting under S. 437 of the Cr. P. Code framed a charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Sessions Court. It was contended in revision that the District Magistrate's order was illegal because the accused had been acquitted and not discharged.

Held, that the First Class Magistrate's order was substantially one discharging the accused in respect of an alleged offence under S. 395 of the Penal Code and that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order in question. (Kincaid and Aston, A. J. C.) KHANU v. EMPEROR.

It is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses at once, that is to say, on the day when the order of commitment is made, and that if he does not do so, the Magistrate will have a discretion to allow or not to allow any such application if it is made on any subsequent date. If, however, such an application is made and is allowed, then the application whether under sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2) will be governed by the same principle. —To have all his witnesses present at the Sessions Court.

An accused, who has complied with the requirements of S. 211 of the Code, and has put in at once his list of defence witnesses, is entitled as of right to have the attendance of those witnesses at the Sessions trial enforced in the event of their ignoring, or failing to comply with the summons. ## —S. 213—Discharge.

—Grounds for.

If a Magistrate hearing a charge triable by the Court of Sessions comes to the conclusion that the evidence before him is totally untrustworthy and there is no reasonable possibility of the case resulting in a conviction, he is entitled and it is, indeed, his duty, to discharge the accused under S. 209, Criminal Procedure Code. The same result follows if he comes to a similar conclusion after framing a charge and hearing witnesses for the defence under S. 213 (2). Of course this discretion is to be carefully exercised, and wherever there is a possibility of the evidence, the Magistrate, even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for a conviction, should leave it to the Sessions Court to decide. 40 All. 615, not foll.; 1922 All. 168, foll. ## —S. 213—Revision.

—Interference in principles.

To test whether there is or is not evidence for a Judge to decide and to quash a commitment it is necessary to accept the evidence for the prosecution. Whether the evidence is believed or disbelieved at the trial is a matter with which High Court is not concerned.

The real test deciding as to whether there is evidence which could fairly be acted upon it is whether a Judge at a trial held with the aid of jurymen could say that there was no evidence which could go before a jury. Whether an accomplice can be believed or whether the evidence of an accomplice has been corroborated is a matter for decision at the trial. The function of a Court of revision is not to sit in judgment over the order of a Magistrate committing a case to the Court of Session. 5 All. 161, Dist. (Bamerji, J.) BAL CHAND v. KING-EMPEROR 98 I. ## —S. 215—Appeal.

—Commitment—Not challenged—No ground of appeal.

A commitment once made stands, unless quashed by the High Court, and if it is not quashed the trial of the persons must take place in pursuance thereof. Where, in an appeal against conviction, it was contended that the order of the District Magistrate directing further enquiry which resulted in commitment was illegal, but the High Court was not moved at all to quash the commitment.

Held, that the trial was perfectly in order. A commitment is quashed with only one object, namely, that the trial of the persons committed may not take place. If a trial has already taken place it serves no purpose to impugn the commitment. (Martineau and Zafar Ali, J.J.) NAZIR SINGH v. EMPEROR.

There is no reason to commit to the Sessions cases where the Magistrate can adequately deal with the offence himself and no overriding reason exists for committal to the higher Court, even if the death of person is involved therein. 11 S. 24 S.L.R. 157=A. I. R. 1930 Sind 145.—Case of doubt—Committal no error of law.

A distinction must be made between a case where the Magistrate has discharged an accused under S. 209, Cr. P. Code, refusing to commit him, and one, where, in fact, he has directed a committal, although he disbelieves the main prosecution evidence. In the former case High Court will not interfere with the order of discharge, but in the later High Court will not quash the committal. Where a Magistrate in an order committing the accused to the Sessions Court says that, although he has some doubts about the evidence, he thinks it better that the case should go before a jury, he cannot be said to have committed an error of law, which would justify the quashing of the commitment. Where a Magistrate allowed accused to obtain copies of statements of prosecution witnesses under S. 162 but refused to adjourn the case for giving time to accused to obtain copies and then to allow cross-examination.

Held, that the refusal was a direct violation of the statutory provision contained in Cl. (2) of S. 208 and it was a point of law which vitiates the commitment made by the Magistrate and such a commitment can be quashed under S. 215 of the Code. (Jwala Prasad and Macpherson, J.J.) An order of committal to Sessions is improper if it is made in pursuance of a request by the accused or because the case has created sensation in accused's community or on the ground that the amount involved, the offence being of cheating, is large. Such an order is liable to be set aside by the High Court. (Case-law referred to.) (Marten and Madgavkar, J.J.) EMPEROR v. ACHALDAS JETHAMAL. 28 Bom. L. R. 293=

—Manifest and fatal flaw in prosecution.

Commitments should only be quashed when on the face of it there is something of the nature of a fatal flaw in the prosecution. The accused were railway clerks who, under the orders of the station master, altered certain entries in the registers which were maintained by them. The action of the station master was held by a Civil Court to be wrong. But the error was due to the honest mistake of the station master in his view as to some railway rules. The accused had no animus in the matter, and were only acting on the orders of their superior officer.

Held, that the proceedings which had been taken against the accused for forgery must be quashed. (Stuart, J.) GULAB SINGH v. EMPEROR.

—Non-observance of S. 360.

During the commitment proceedings the provisions of S. 360, Cr. P. Code, were not at all observed. During the trial the said provisions were not complied with in the case of the majority of the witnesses. Public Prosecutor applied to the Sessions Judge for a de novo trial. This was about a month after the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in 1924 Cal. 889 regarding Cr. P. Code, S. 360 was published. On the basis of the application by the Public Prosecutor the Sessions Judge recommended to the High Court that the commitments themselves should be quashed. The accused opposed this. Most, if not all, of the accused persons were in hajat, and some of them had been in hajat, for about a year and a half or so.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the commitments should not be quashed, but that the trying Court should recall the witnesses in respect of whom S. 360 was not complied with and take steps to comply with those provisions so far as these witnesses were concerned. A commitment can be quashed on a point of law only. It cannot be quashed on the ground that there is no evidence on the committing Magistrate's record to sustain the charges. 13 Bom. L. R. 201 and 27 M. L. J. 593, Foll. (Baker, J. C.) ISMAIL v. EMPEROR.

While it is not desirable that there should be two trials in respect of the same act, namely the giving of false evidence, one for giving false evidence under S. 193 and another for abetment of the fraudulent use of a forged document under Ss. 471/109 it is no ground to quash a commitment. —Doubts as to credibility of evidence—No ground.

The High Court has no power to quash the commitment merely because of doubts as to the credibility of the evidence of the prosecution, if there is, in fact, some evidence which would justify the Sessions Judge in leaving the decision of guilt or innocence to the jury. 7 Bur. —In commitment—Trial not vitiated.

The Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to try a case which has been committed for trial to him, and if the trial is legally held it is doubtful if an irregularity in the commitment would vitiate the proceedings in the Sessions Court. 12 C. L. R. 120, Foll. When a person has been put on his trial and pleads to the charge, the commitment cannot be quashed, as it is too late to object to the commitment after the accused has pleaded to the charge before the Sessions Court. —Interference in.

Where a Magistrate, in making an order of commitment, has contravened any provision of law, the High Court is entitled and ought to set aside the commitment on the ground; but where he has not violated any provision of law and has only erred in the exercise of the discretion vested in him, the High Court will seldom interfere in such a case. —S. 215—Scope.

—Negative and restrictive:

Section 215 is a negative or restrictive section. It is intended to negative the existence in Sessions Courts to quash commitments and it is intended to restrict a High Court to cases in which it can be said that the commitment is bad in law. This last restriction is a restriction upon all powers which the High Court might otherwise possess, and it attaches to revisional powers as well. However, it does not take away by implication any other power to quash commitment which is prima facie incident to any superior Court receiving commitments from lower Courts as the basis of its own jurisdiction. CR. P. CODE (1898).*—S. 215—Test for quashing.

High Court under S. 215 would not ordinarily interfere with an order of committal unless it is satisfied from the record that there was an illegality in the order. The test in a matter of this nature is to see from the judgment of the Magistrate what his findings on the evidence are and whether those findings are capable prima facie of sustaining the charges he has framed and on which the committal to the Court of Session is made. (Mirza and Murphy, J.J.) EMPEROR v. YELLAPPA DURGAJI. 119 I. C. 647 = 31 Bom. L. R. 523 = 30 Cr. L. J. 1066 = A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 269.

—S. 216—Serious offences.*—Opportunity should be given.

Where the accused are tried for offences under Ss. 363 and 367, I. P. C. every opportunity should be given to them to adduce evidence on behalf of the defence either oral or documentary and in refusing such evidence the Judge does not exercise proper discretion. If the Judge is of opinion that the evidence adduced by the accused is inadmissible or irrelevant or that such evidence is adduced for the purpose of vexation or delay or to defeat the ends of justice he can refuse to receive such evidence. (Suhrwardy and Page, J.J.) MUKTAL HOSSEIN v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 538 = 126 I. C. 720 = 31 Cr. L. J. 1077 = A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 362.

—S. 221—Charge—Material facts to be stated.

In order to convict a man of an offence, all the material facts which constitute the offence, and which are necessary to enable the parties to avail themselves of the verdict and judgment, should the same charge be again brought forward, must be stated upon the indictment, and all these requisite allegations must be satisfied in evidence, and proved as laid. But allegations not essential to such purpose, which might be entirely omitted without affecting the charge against the person and without detriment to the indictment are considered as mere surplusage and may be disregarded in evidence. The indictment may be good or bad, but it cannot depend upon the facts which will ultimately be found by the jury and it must be good or bad at the beginning of the trial. A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 107, Rel. on. (Rankin, C. J. and Cholsner, J.) SATYA NARAIN v. EMPEROR. 55 Cal. 858 = 32 C. W. N. 319 = 29 Cr. L. J. 1022 = 112 I. C. 350 = A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 675.

—S. 221—Cheating.*—Manner of cheating must be given.

An accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the accusation brought against him. In a case of cheating the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed. Whether the orders of the charge are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the accusation which he has got to meet depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. The omission to state the manner of the cheating is regarded as material or not accordingly as the accused has or has not in fact been misled by the omission and the omission has or has not occasioned a failure of justice. In the charges framed in the case the manner of the cheating was set out as follows:—"By deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by conduct."

Held, that the expression used was too vague and indefinite to give the accused proper notice of the manner of the deceit and was so dangerously wide as might include almost anything. (Newbould and Mukerjee, J.J.) KEDAR NATH CHAKRAVARTI v. EMPEROR. 86 I. C. 705 = 26 Cr. L. J. 849 = 29 C. W. N. 408 = 41 C. L. J. 172 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 603.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 221—Mistake in the form of charge.—S. 221—Conspiracy.—Specific acts need not be stated.

A charge for conspiracy need not state in all its details the actual specific acts which the conspirators are alleged to have agreed to do or to cause to be done. In most conspiracies the agreement amongst the conspirators is of a general nature, and there is no agreement as to the specific act to be done by each conspirator. (Damel O'Connell v. Reg., 80 E. R. 155, Dist. (Mya Bu and Brown, J.J.) HTIN GYAW v. EMPEROR. 6 Rang. 6 = 109 I. C. 491 = 29 Cr. L. J. 555 = 10 A. I. Cr. R. 249 = A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 118.

—Special responsibility—Section necessary.

Where a conspirator is present at the commission of the offence he may under the provisions of Section 114, I. P. C., be deemed to have committed the offence, but if that is the way in which the accused is to be made responsible for the offences he should be specifically charged with such offence as read with the provisions of S. 114, I. P. C. Where the only evidence of the accused being a conspirator was his presence at the commission of the offence, there may arise a further question, viz., whether it would be permissible to infer conspiracy from mere presence, and again to make him liable as principal by taking into account the fact that he was present at the commission of the offence. (Walmsley and Mukerjee, J.J.) ALIMUDDI NASKAR v. EMPEROR. 85 I. C. 231 = 40 C. L. J. 541 = 29 C. W. N. 173 = 52 Cal. 253 = 26 Cr. L. J. 487 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 341.

—S. 221—Contents of charge.

A charge-sheet should never contain more than what is necessary for the prosecution to prove. (Wazir Hasan and Simpson, A.J.Cs.) BHULAN v. EMPEROR. 27 Cr. L. J. 57 = 91 I. C. 233 = A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 245.

—Specific acts of accused and specific sections of Penal Code.

The charge-sheet corresponds to the English indictment, and it is very much more than a mere form. An accused person is entitled to be informed with the greatest precision what acts he is said to have committed, and under what sections of the Penal Code these acts fall. (Simpson, A. J. C.) SHEO SHANKAR v. EMPEROR. 2 O. W. N. 862 = 27 Cr. L. J. 62 = 91 I. C. 238 = A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 148.

—Curability.

The failure to enter in the charge the actual words used in the deposition is at most an irregularity cured by S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Prideaux A.J.C.) MIRABUX v. EMPEROR. 68 I. C. 36 = 18 N. L. R. 192 = 23 Cr. L. J. 500 = A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 39.

—S. 221—Irregularity.

A plea that though there was publication of the statement, there was no publication to person mentioned in the charge is a highly technical plea and the defect in the charge is curable under S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Kincaid, J.C.) TIKAMDAS v. EMPEROR. 96 I. C. 499 = 27 Cr. L. J. 947 = 7 A. I. Cr. R. 21 = A. I. R. 1927 Sind 58.

—S. 221—Mistake in the form of charge.

Where in the form of the charge there was a mere slip, the word "or" being used for "and" between two charges framed under Ss. 221 and 242, Penal Code, and none of the accused was in any way prejudiced by the fact that in form the charge was in the alternative whereas in substance two quite distinct offences were charged,

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 221—Mistake in the form of charge.

Held, that the conviction of the accused in respect of both the charges was not bad. (Jack and Pancridge, J.J.) NABAB ALI v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1108 = 34 C. W. N. 1151 = A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 708.

—S. 221—Murder.

A charge under S. 302, I. P. C., should follow the language of S. 300, I. P. C., which contains the definition of murder. (Simpson, A. J. C.) SHEO SHANKAR v. EMPEROR. 2 O. W. N. 862 = 27 Cr. L. J. 62 = 91 I. C. 238 = A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 148.

—S. 221—Objection to charge.*—Stage—Curability.

Where the wording of a charge was neither accurate nor clear but the accused and his counsel understood the real charge and an objection as to the validity of the charge was raised by the counsel for the accused for the first time during his arguments, held, that the defect in the charge was cured by S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Baguley, C. J.) K. C. V. REDDY v. EMPEROR. 8 Rang. 25 = 1930 Cr. C. 661 = 125 I. C. 266 = 31 Cr. L. J. 793 = A. I. R. 1930 Rang. 201.

—S. 221—Rioting.*—Ingredients unnecessary.

It is not necessary in a charge of rioting to set out the allegation that there were five or more persons actuated by a common object. Rioting is an offence with a specific name and it is sufficient to describe the offence by that name and that name only. S. 221, cl. (2) contemplates a case of this description and is enacted to meet a case of this kind. When a person is charged with rioting, it means that the prosecution alleges that all necessary ingredients constituting the offence of rioting are present. It is not necessary for the prosecution to set out what these ingredients are. (Cuming and Gregroy, J.J.) EMPEROR v. RAMCHANDRA. 55 Cal. 879 = 10 A. I. Cr. B. 456 = 29 Cr. L. J. 823 = 111 I. C. 327 = A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 732.

—Common object—Necessary.

In the case of rioting it is necessary that the common object of the unlawful assembly should have been clearly stated in the charge. (Zafar Ali, J.) ALLAH DAD v. THE CROWN. 75 I. C. 731 = 25 Cr. L. J. 43 = A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 667.

—S. 221—Two offences.*—Mention of one.

Where the accused was separately charged under S. 325 (grievous hurt) and S. 149 (unlawful assembly), but there was no mention of S. 149 in the charge under S. 325.

Held, that the irregularity was curable under S. 537. 16 Cal. 442, Appr. (Findlay, O. J. C.) DEOJI v. KING-EMPEROR. 95 I. C. 606 = 27 Cr. L. J. 830 = A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 459.

—S. 221—Vague charge.*—Not proper.

It is not proper to frame a charge that the accused did a certain act with a view to commit a certain offence or any other offence punishable with imprisonment. The reason is that the accused must know the specific offence charged against him. (Greaves and Duval, J.J.) BALARAM KUNDU v. EMPEROR. 82 I. C. 50 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1186 = A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 160.

—S. 221—Words used.*—Adherence to words of Statute is desirable.

An accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact value of the charge brought against him for unless he has this knowledge he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence. In framing charges it is always a sound rule for the Court to adhere to the language of the statute as far as possible. A departure from the words of the Statute benefits nobody and only introduces complications in many instances. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) CHHAKARI SHAIK v. EMPEROR. 26 Cr. L. J. 567 = 85 I. C. 711 = A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 439.

—S. 222—Charge.*—Inaccuracy as to time—Accused, if prejudiced.

The accused are not prejudiced because the charge stated that they committed an offence in September whilst the evidence showed that the offence was completed before. (Brown, J.) U. PATHADA, U. PADUMA AND U. NANDIYA v. EMPEROR. 84 I. C. 245 = 3 Bur. L. J. 178 = 26 Cr. L. J. 245 = A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 371.

—S. 222—Contents of charge.*—Charge of abetment by being present at offence of mischief—No particulars as to any act before the offence—Effect.

Where the charge against the accused was "you abetted by being present in the commission of the offence of mischief and thereby committed an offence punishable under Ss. 430 and 114, I.P.C." but no acts were alleged against the accused relating to a point of time previous to the time of the commission of the offence and the case ought to be made out against him was that he was present where the offence was committed and instigated the co-accused to commit the offence at the time when they committed it.

Held, that the accused was misled by the charge and failure of justice was caused. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.) AMMANI v. EMPEROR. 82 I. C. 262 = 21 M. L. W. 19 = 25 Cr. L. J. 1254 = A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 364.

—S. 222—Dacoity.*—A single general charge without dates is bad.

The accused were under trial for waging war. One of the counts in the charge was that "you and others did loot the Police Stations above mentioned" (of which there were eight) on dates not specified and that you did extract supplies of food and other articles by force or threats from the villagers of various villages on dates not specified.

Held, (Per Spencer, Offg. C. J.) that the count was too vague. Each looting of a village or Police Station should have been treated as a separate offence if it was intended to try any or all of the accused for dacoity apart from waging war. Otherwise the convictions for dacoity must be quashed on the ground of the charges not giving the accused sufficient notice and particulars of what they had to meet. (Krishnan, J., on difference between Spencer, Offg. C. J. and Reilly, J.) GAM MALLU DORA. In re. 90 I. C. 297 = 49 Mad. 74 = 1925 M. W. N. 192 = 26 Cr. L. J. 1513 = A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 690 = 48 M. L. J. 308.

—S. 222—Misappropriation.

Where an accused person is charged under S. 408, I.P. Code, with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of money misappropriated by him within the period of one year and the charge not only specifies the gross sum taken and the dates between which it was taken, but also sets out the items composing such gross sum giving the dates and the amounts alleged to have been misappropriated, the charge comes within the provisions of cl. (2), S. 222, Cr. P. Code, and that if by specifying the items composing the gross sums the charge went beyond what was necessary instead of prejudicially affecting the accused it is to that extent favourable to the accused. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 222—Misappropriation.

—A who was B's clerk and sold rice for him was charged with having received Rs. 60 on 10—8—28 and two other sums on 24—9—28 and having misappropriated the same without properly bringing them to account and was convicted. A similar complaint was subsequently filed in respect of an amount collected on 14—8—28. It was contended that A having been previously convicted for criminal breach of trust in respect of sums collected on 10th and 24th of September, 1928, could not again be tried in respect of an amount collected on an intermediate date, 14—8—28.

Held, that the trial was not illegal. The former case against A was not for a gross sum misappropriated within two dates but was for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates and S. 222 (2) did not come into operation. The charge pending against A could therefore be heard. That the trial could not be stopped under S. 561-A unless it was shown that there was an abuse of process of the Court. —The object of the amendment made by the introduction of Sub-sec. (2) to Section 222, Cr. P. Code, was not to amend the Penal Code, but merely to get rid of a technical difficulty in framing a formal document, viz., the charge. By this amendment the procedural law was altered to meet two difficulties. Under the law as it stood before, there was very great difficulty in convicting where there was a running a count and where the prosecution was unable to put their hands on a specific item of which the particular sum was embezzled or to which it was attributable. The other difficulty was that under Section 234, Cr. P. Code, it was not allowed to have more than three offences of the same kind, and so the charge could not legally stand. The law on these two points was altered and altered for the better. It was not intended either to throw the onus on the accused by bringing a charge against him of a deficiency in his accounts or to do away with the necessity of proving the elements of the offence as laid down in the Indian Penal Code. The alleged facts of the case were that the complainant paid a certain amount to the accused for redeeming certain jewel pledged with the accused, that the accused received the money and, saying that he would get the jewels, absconded. The charge under S. 420, I. P. Code, was to the effect that the accused dishonestly induced the complainant to part with several gold and silver ornaments on false representation and thereby committed the said offence.

Held, the charge did not correctly set out the facts of the case for the prosecution upon which it was founded, and that the real charge under S. 420 I. P. Code, which could be framed upon the case as presented on behalf of the prosecution was that the accused dishonestly induced the complainant to part with the sum, dishonestly concealing from the complainant the fact that he never intended to return the ornaments for the return of which the amount was being paid.

Held, further that this defect in the framing of the charge, though a material one, did not prejudice the accused in any way as it was clear from the answer which the accused gave to the Court when examined under the provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. Code, that he understood exactly what the case against him was. (Mukerji, J.) GOKUL KHATIC v. EMPEROR.

Held, that the Sessions Judge acted within his powers in adding the charges relating to the injuries. So long as the facts appearing in the Magisterial inquiry warrant the framing of the charge omitted by the committing Magistrate, the Sessions Court has power to add the charge so omitted. J., of that district upon a commitment of the accused with charge under S. 436 altered the charge to one under S. 149 read with S. 436 and tried the case with the help of assessors.

Held, that the trial was void as being without jurisdiction. The trial of an offence under S. 149 read with S. 436 is a trial under S. 436 as the Court must always first determine whether the offence under S. 436 has been committed by an individual and next whether S. 149 makes the participants responsible. Exactly same is the case with S. 34, I. P. C.

Held, further that the Sessions Judge ought not to have withdrawn the charge under S. 436 and substituted that under S. 149 read with S. 436 which put the accused under a disadvantage as they were deprived of the right of trial by jury, the assessor's opinion being less final on a question of fact than the verdict of a jury. defence was concluded altered the charge into one under S. 307, I. P. Code and did not give an opportunity to the accused to re-examine the witnesses for the prosecution with reference to the altered charge or to produce further defence evidence but committed him to the Court of Sessions on the altered charge. Held, that the procedure was entirely illegal and was likely to prejudice the accused. The order of commitment is therefore set aside. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.) MOHAN LAL v. EMPEROR. 81 I. C. 318=22 A. L. J. 239=25 Cr. L. J. 798=5 L. B. A. Cr. 79=A. I. R. 1924 All. 665.

—S. 231—Re-call of witnesses.

—Peremptory.

The provisions of S. 231 are peremptory and therefore when a charge is altered, the Court is bound to re-call any witness which the prosecution or the accused desire. (Allanson and Sen, J.) CHHAUKA DHAUNK v. EMPEROR. 104 I. C. 97=6 Pat. 832=8 A. I. C. R. 570=8 P. L. T. 825=28 Cr. L. J. 769=A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 398.

—S. 232—Scanty evidence.

In a charge framed under S. 498 against the accused in the trial Court, it was alleged that he had taken the woman away from the complainant's custody, but the nature of the evidence showed that the charge was intended to relate to the alleged taking away of the complainant's wife from one B's house. There was, however, no finding that B had the care of the woman on behalf of her husband, the complainant, nor was there any evidence on the record that would justify such a finding.

Held, that from the very scanty nature of the evidence connecting the accused with the offence, it would not be proper to order a re-trial on an amended charge. (Rankin, C. J. and Patterson, J.) SUNNAT MANDAL v. MAKAR SHEIKH. 124 I. C. 520=31 Cr. L. J. 697=1930 Cr. C. 138=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 138.

—S. 232—Scope and applicability.

The rule of law that if any person is misled in his defence by the absence of any charge or an error in the charge a retrial is to be ordered, applies as well to cases in which the conviction was in compliance with the terms of the law as to cases in which the conviction was irregular. But mere defect or irregularity in procedure is not sufficient, the prejudice to the accused being the real test. (Courtney Terrell, C. J. and Rowland, J.) MALLU GOPA v. EMPEROR. 118 I. ## —S. 233—Alternative charges.

There is no misjoinder in charging the accused with the main offence namely murder, and under Ss. 201 to 203, I. P. Code. (Wallace and Jackson, J.J.) CHINNA GANGAPPA v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1126=1930 M. W. N. 489=32 M. L. W. 389=A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 870=59 M. L. J. 677.

—S. 233—Cross-cases.

—Joint trial—Illegal.

There were two cross-cases arising out of a riot and although two separate records were prepared, only one joint trial was held and the prosecution evidence in each case was treated as defence evidence in the other case.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 233—Cross-cases.

Held, that the procedure was illegal and the trials must be quashed. (Abdul Raouf, J.) MUHAMMAD v. EMPEROR. 81 I. C. 39=25 Cr. L. J. 551=A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 149.

—S. 233—Distinct offences.

—Sharfuddin and Nanhe accused were detected while stealing the crop of the complainant Chiddu Chamar, who objected to the theft and was compelled to run away to his house. After this, Sharfuddin and Nanhe hearing that the complainant intended to go to the police station to make a report, went along with the other persons to the complainant's chaupal and there caused hurt to Chiddu, and grievous hurt to his father Nanhe.

Held, that the two offences were obviously quite distinct and separate, and there was also an interval of time between their commission. Held, further, that they were not so connected together as to form the same transaction. (Sulaiman, J.) SHAFI v. EMPEROR.

—S. 233—Joinder of accused.

—Applicability.

There is no provision in the Cr. P. Code requiring a separate inquiry in respect of each accused person. The provision contained in S. 233 relates to separate trials only. Hence no question of illegal joint trial arises when the accused persons are discharged under S. 253; 9 N. L. R. 42, Rel. on; 4 N. L. R. 71 and 13 N. L. R. 35, Dist. (*Mohiuddin, A. J. ## —S. 233—Joinder of charges.

—S. 537—Curability—Principle underlying.

It cannot be assumed that if a mandatory provision of the Code has been infringed in framing the charge, the Court must of necessity be held to have failed in administering justice to the accused. S. 537 affords no real grounds for any such assumption. The impugned procedure must be one that is not only prohibited by the Code but also works actual injustice to the accused. A. I. R. 1927 P. ## —Mischief and riot—Bad.

In a case where the act of mischief is quite a separate transaction from that of riot, and the same persons are not accused in both transactions, the trial is bad for misjoinder of charges. ## —Irregularity—Test—Prejudice to defence.

Where offences under S. 416 were committed in respect of two separate attachment warrants but in the same transaction and the Magistrate framed one charge in respect of both the offences.

Held, the offences formed part of the same transaction, and the law allows that they can be tried together. It is immaterial whether the two offences were included in one charge or whether they were separated and each of them was made the basis of a charge. Assuming it was an irregularity, the main consideration should be whether any error, omission or irregularity would cause any embarrassment either to the defence or to the Court, whether it would prejudice the accused in his defence, and whether it had caused a miscarriage of justice. 25 Mad. 61 (P. C.) and 19 C. W. N. 972, Ref. (Maung Ba and Doyle, J.J.) ABDUL RAHMAN v. EMPEROR. 94 I. C. 717=4 Bur. L. J. 213=27 Cr. L. J. 669=A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 53.

—Murder of several by one act.

Where several persons are murdered by setting fire to the hut in which they are sleeping, to frame one charge of murder comprising the names of all the victims instead of a separate charge being framed with regard to each is a defect but is only a technical defect.

Per Mukherji, J.—The first part of S. 233, Cr. P. Code, lays down that for each distinct offence shall be a separate charge. The provision is mandatory and a number of different charges should have been framed for these several offences of murder which appear to have been huddled into the first count as it stands. Whether this provision of the law is obligatory or merely directory, or whether the failure to comply with it is an illegality which vitiates the trial or is a mere irregularity, is a question with regard to which there is a clear conflict of judicial opinion in the Calcutta High Court. (Walsley and Mukerji, J.J.) ALIMUDDI NASKAR v. EMPEROR. 85 I. C. 231=40 C. L. J. 544=52 Cal. 253=29 C. W. N. 173=26 Cr. L. J. 487=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 344.

CR. P. CODE (1898).

—S. 233—Omission of charge.

—Under S. 149, Penal Code—Not illegal.

S. 149 creates no offence but is like S. 34 merely declaratory of a principle of the common law and its object is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand which inflicted the grievous hurt. A person cannot be tried and sentenced under S. 149 alone, no punishment being provided by the section. Therefore the omission of S. 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of S. 233, Cr. P. Code, which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge. (Spencer, Krishnan and Ramesam, J.J.) THEETHUMALAI GOUNDAR, In re.

A person was accused of committing theft of eight necklaces in the possession of a temple under his management, on different occasions extending over a year—A charge was framed under S. 381, I.P.C. It was contended that the trial was vitiated owing to misjoinder of charges.

Held, that the offence in regard to the necklaces being one of criminal breach of trust and the transaction in regard to each necklace being a separate one, it was necessary to charge the accused separately with each offence and every such offence must be tried separately. Although it may be said that there was technically no misjoinder of charges, as only one charge was drawn, the trial was vitiated in the same way as if there had been misjoinder of charges and this was not a mere irregularity. 25 Mad. 61 (P. ## —S. 234—Distinct offences.

—Procedure—There is no presumption as to date of receipt of stolen property where several articles of stolen property are found in possession of accused—Procedure to be adopted for trial is to charge the accused for 3 offences regarding 3 parcels on the assumption that each offence is independent.

Where no evidence, one way or other, exists as to whether receipt of various parcels of stolen property took place at the same or different dates no presumption can be drawn or assumption made as against the accused either that the offence of retention by the receiver constitutes one or more than one connected transaction. The prosecution cannot base its case or justify its procedure upon any presumption or assumption operating against an accused unless such presumption or assumption is grounded upon evidence. If the prosecution frames a charge on the presumption that the retentions constituted a set of independent offences, it must include only three parcels in respect of which the charge is made and the prosecution may then be met with the plea that these retentions in fact constituted one transaction and one offence, in which case the charge could be amended accordingly and the whole of the stolen property included in one single charge and the accused tried at one single trial. Similarly, if the prosecution chooses to prosecute on several separate charges in several separate proceedings, directly one case is concluded and the accused is convicted or acquitted, the plea will, of course, at once be put forward, namely, that the accused can take the benefit of the provisions of S. 403, of Cr.P. Code on the ground that the retentions constituted a single transaction and a single offence and no presumption or assumption to the contrary can be raised as against the accused. It is obvious, therefore, that the only safe course to adopt, in cases of this character where no date of reception is known or can be proved by the prosecution, is to take advantage of the first course indicated above. This course whilst giving the accused the advantage of not being injured by the inclusion in the count of a very large number of parcels of stolen property a course which might affect him prejudicially if his case was being tried before assessors or a jury and the avoidance of which is really the object of S.234 of the Cr. P. Code prevents the accused from objecting respectively in any way to the trial, for if he contends that the whole matter is but one transaction and one offence then the charge can at once be amended to include the whole of the property. Where two accused had already been tried for the offence of the retention of stolen property (carpets) found in their possession at the same time as were the stamps the subject matter of the second trial, and their plea at the second trial was that they had already been tried at the first trial with the same offence as that with which they were charged in the second trial.

Held, they, in effect, claim the presumption in their favour that their retention of all these goods was one offence and one transaction, and to the benefit of this presumption they are entitled. The fact that one has been acquitted and the other convicted makes no difference. The contention that as the articles recovered from their possession were of very diverse character, the offences of the dishonest retention of each set of articles were distinct offences is negatived by the definition of what is the same offence as defined in sub-S. (2) of S. 234 of the Cr. P. Code. It is there prescribed that offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same section of the Indian Penal Code. S. 234 permits the joinder of three charges against one accused, and S. 239, read with S. 234, permits the joinder of two charges against one accused with the charges of abetment of those two offences against another accused. If in any case either the accused are likely to be bewildered in their defence by having to meet many disconnected charges or the prospect of a fair trial is likely to be endangered by the production of a mass of evidence directed to many different matters and tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused, then the propriety of combining the charges can be questioned. The offence of hiring a person to take part in a riot is a separate and distinct offence from the riot itself and ordinarily the hiring and the riot would be separate transactions. The fact that the offence under S. 352, I.P.C. is punishable with less than six months' imprisonment, and is ordinarily triable as a summons case, does not avail to support the proposition that no charge is required to be framed in respect of the offence under S. 352, if an accused is tried for it along with other offences under the provisions of S. 235. But if the series of acts committed is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts proved constitute, the accused can be convicted under S. 352, I.P.C. even though he can be charged under S. 149, provided the absence of charge under S. 342, does not mislead the accused in his defence. 29 Cal. 481, Dist.; A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 130, Rel. on. —S. 235—Embarrassing joinder—S. 239.

—Enabling provisions—should not be resorted to if it embarrasses defence.

In a case of a charge of conspiracy, and nine separate charges of murder and one of arson, upon the allegation that all these offences were committed in pursuance of the conspiracy or at any rate in the course of the same transaction and applying the exceptions laid down in Ss. 235 and 239, Cr. P. Code, all these charges could no doubt be legally joined; but the provisions of these sections are merely enabling ones and if there is risk of embarrassing the defence such joinder of charges should not be resorted to. There was evidence against all the accused together, only of conspiracy to commit murder. A number of murders and an offence of arson were committed. Though all the accused were present, there was only evidence against some of them as regards these the latter offences. All the accused were charged with conspiracy, murder and arson and the jury returned a verdict of guilty against all the accused on all the charges.

One of the counts in the charge against the accused under trial for waging war was that they had committed dacoity. This count failed as being too vague.

Held, (Per Spencer, Offg. C.J.) that the validity of the conviction under S. 121 was not affected by the striking off of the convictions for other offences forming component parts of the offence of waging war, and the accused cannot be said to have been prejudiced in their defence on the charge for waging war, as the acts of dacoity were all merely some of a series of incidents which went to make up the continuing offence of waging war, within the meaning of S. 235 (3). The accused made an application to the District Magistrate containing allegations of ill-treatment by the police and certain police patels in the course of a police inquiry. The District Magistrate examined her on this application, and she then stated that she could not give the name of the police officers by whom she had been beaten for certain reasons. Subsequently she made a statement to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in which she alleged that a certain Sub-Inspector and a certain head constable had beaten her in this inquiry. A complaint was made against her at the instance of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 193, I. P. C. A charge was framed against the accused in that case, which first of all charged her with having made two contradictory statements, one of which statements she either believed to be false or did not believe to be true. The Magistrate, on withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor, acquitted the accused under S. 494 (b), Cr. P. Code. —Close connection by continuity of purpose is enough.

Whether a transaction is the same or not is a question of fact depending on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. It is not necessary for the purposes of Ss. 235 and 239 that the acts should have been committed all on the same occasion, but it is sufficient that, though separated by a distinct interval of time, they are closely connected by continuity of purpose or as progressive acts towards a single object.

Under the decree of a Civil Court certain lands had been given to the complainant. The accused went on these lands and cut and took away paddy from some of the plots. On the next day they went on the other plots and cut and took away other paddy.

Held, that the events of the two days really formed one transaction, for in each case the object of the accused was to assert their rights or alleged rights over the lands which had been awarded by the decree of the Civil Court to the complainant and that the accused were rightly tried together in respect of the offences on both the days. J.*—When a series of acts are so connected by community of purpose and continuity of action as to form not only one transaction but a single offence, proximity of time between the performance of the various acts composing that offence not being the sole test of the unity of the transaction, S. 235 authorises persons accused of doing these acts to be charged and tried at one trial for them all. —Test—Connection by same purpose, as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary act.

The expression "same transaction" is incapable of exact definition. The arena of facts covered by the expression "same transaction" varies with the circumstances of each case. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one transaction depends upon whether they are so related together in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal or subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous action.

Where the accused was charged under Ss. 304-A, 337 and 338 and under Ss. 465 and 471 or S. 193, I. P. C., in the alternative for forging entries in order to conceal his offence of criminal neglect, —Continuity of action and purpose rather than proximity of time.

The word "transaction" suggests not necessarily proximity in time so much as continuity of action and purpose, i.e., it is not necessary that the acts should have been committed all on the same occasion but it is sufficient that, though separated by a distinct interval of time they are closely connected by continuity of purpose or progressive action towards a single object. Where the accusation against all the accused persons is that they carried out a single scheme by successive acts done at intervals, and there was a complete unity of project and the whole series of acts were so linked together by one motive and design as to constitute one transaction within the meaning of S. 239, a joint trial is not only legal but is demanded in the interest of public time and convenience. In all these cases, however, the foundation for the procedure is the association of two or more persons concurring from start to finish to attain the same end.

Where four accused were engaged in the crime from the 25th June but the 5th did join them only on the 7th July next, held, that the trial has not been vitiated by reason of the four accused being tried together with the 5th accused in respect of the occurrences before the 7th July and that illustration (b) to S. 239 shows that such a trial is permitted by law. —Acts done in pursuance of a common object are parts of the same transaction.

The word "transaction" in S. 235, Cr. P. Code, has a very wide connotation and covers a series of acts connected together, e.g., when a proposal for a boycott is made by the President of an Association and shortly afterwards the Secretary and a member take joint action to boycott the person against whom the resolution is directed, the inference is that they are acting in furtherance of a common purpose or, in other words, that they are taking part in a conspiracy. Acts done in pursuance of such a conspiracy must be deemed to be part of the same transaction. 37 Cal. 467, Foll.

Though to establish a charge of conspiracy there must be agreement, there need not be proof of direct meeting or combination, nor need the parties be brought into each other's presence; the agreement may be inferred from circumstances raising a presumption of a common concerned plan to carry out the unlawful design. The term "transaction" is not synonymous with "offence". 19 C. W. N. 707, Foll. (Pratt, J.) EMPEROR v. NGA AUNG GYAW.

The accused was the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Netrokana Police Station. On the 7th February last a prostitute named Kamini died in Netrokana town at 2 P. M. in the afternoon. She had executed a registered deed of gift covering most of the properties to one Purna. On her death the Sub-Inspector took charge of the properties left by Kamini and removed them to the Thana shortly after her death. A telegram was sent to Purna who was 17 miles away and he came to the Thana on the morning of the 8th between 10 and 11. In the evening he took away the properties claimed by him except three specific ornaments, gold Gopahar, a pair of gold ananta, and silver rates, which were retained by the Sub-Inspector. Entries had been made in the Police General Diary recording that this property of Kamini had been taken charge of, but the pages containing those entries were torn out and fresh pages were written from which it will appear that the property was never taken to the Thana and that it was made over to Purna at 10 P. M. on the 7th of February. On these allegations, the accused was charged firstly, with having committed criminal misappropriation of the three ornaments belonging to Kamini which had not been delivered to Purna. He was, secondly, charged with having framed the record in a manner which he knew to be incorrect, namely, the entry No. 173 which related to the delivery of Kamini's property to Purna. He was, thirdly, charged under S. 477-A with having destroyed the original entries in the General Diary and with having altered the entry No. 173 already referred to. Further there were three charges of criminal breach of trust by a public servant punishable under S. 409, the first relating to the properties left by Kamini and not covered by the deed of gift in favour of Purna, the second relating to the three specific ornaments already mentioned and the third relating to the properties mentioned in the deed of gift.

Held, that as regards these charges, i.e., under Ss. 218 and 477-A they fall under two separate definitions of the law and the accused can be jointly charged and tried at one trial for these offences under S. 235, and that the joinder of the other charges is covered by the provisions of that section, as all the charges relate to acts which are so connected together as to form one transaction. The matter was reported to the Postmaster F who took possession of the letters saying that he would take necessary action in the matter. No action being taken by F, the matter was reported to the Postmaster-General with the result that F was sent up for trial. The Magistrate framed two alternate charges against him, first under S. 52, Post Office Act and the other under S. 201, Penal Code. The Magistrate found F guilty only under S. 201. It was contended that the charge framed by the Magistrate was defective and prejudicial to the accused, the alternate charge was illegal and contravened the provisions of S. 236, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the first charge was not defective, as the postal articles in question were "in course of transmission by post" according to S. 3, Post Office Act, when they were made over to F by K and, therefore, the mere fact that the letters had been posted when F was not the Postmaster of the Post Office was immaterial. The framing of the charge in the alternative under S. 201 did not contravene S. 236, Cr. P. Code. (Broadway, J.) EMPEROR v. FAIZUL HASSAN. 1930 Cr. C. 564 = A. I. R. 1930 Lah. 460.

—Procedure.

Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charge. If the Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative he must frame two separate alternative charges. While the facts are in doubt there is no objection to the Magistrate framing alternative charges, but at the conclusion of the case he is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative. What constitutes.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 237—Abetment and offence.

To attract the applicability of the section and justify a charge in the alternative it is essential to remember that it is only when the statements constitute a “series of acts” that an alternative charge can be framed under S. 236. As there is a common relation between a police investigation, an inquiry by the Magistrate preliminary to commitment and a final trial in the Sessions Court, to the statements made at these different stages the words “series of acts” would be applicable. A series of acts means two or more acts connected together by some common relation. 45 Bom. 834, Expl. and Dist. (Kennedy, J. C. and Raymond, A. J. C.) SALEH SHAH v. EMPEROR.

S. 227 deals with alteration of a charge, but it requires that the alteration shall be read and explained to the accused. —S. 196—Rules governing.

The provisions of the Cr. P. Code, allowing the Court to frame a charge of the offence it finds to be proved, to alter the charge or to convict of an offence of which a charge has not actually been framed, e.g., S. 237, must be read subject to the provisions of S. 196. That is, those powers can be exercised, in respect of offences falling within S. 196, when a prosecution for the offence of which it is proposed to charge or to convict the accused has been duly authorized under that section and cannot be exercised when the prosecution has not been so authorized. When on a prosecution instituted on an order directing prosecution for offence under S. 121-A stating details the Court finds that the facts proved do not constitute the offence of conspiring to wage war punishable under S. 121-A, but that they do constitute an offence punishable under another section comprised in Chap. 6 of the said Code, the Court is not competent to take cognizance of such other offence and to convict the accused persons thereof. —S. 237—Appellate Court, powers of.

—Acquittal on a charge under S. 302, Penal Code only—High Court can in appeal convict the accused under S. 193, Penal Code.

The appellate Court, under S. 423 at least, has the power of the original Court which tried the case under S. 237, provided no prejudice was given to the defence. Therefore, the appellate Court in an appeal from acquittal cannot only find the accused guilty of the offence with which he was charged and for which he was tried but of which he was acquitted, but also can convict an accused of some other offence. Where the accused was charged under S. 302, Penal Code, and was acquitted and Government appealed,

Held, that the appellate Court could convict him for an offence under S. 193, Penal Code even though the opinions of the assessors were not recorded in regard to the charge under S. 193. A. I. —S. 149 does not provide for a separate offence but merely is a declaration that persons found in certain circumstances cannot set up as a defence the fact that they themselves did not commit that offence by their own hands. Certain persons were originally charged under Ss. 147 and 353 for assaulting a constable with a view to resist him and to rescue a certain prisoner. But evidence did not disclose which of the accused actually struck the constable and at whose hands he received the injuries. In consequence, conviction from one under S. 147 and S. 353 was altered to a conviction under Ss. 149 and 323 in appeal. It was contended that the conviction was bad because they were not charged under S. 149.

A Court can substitute a conviction for a lesser offence in appeal than that which has been held to have been committed by the Court of first instance. Where it is found that there was no actual assault, but merely a threat of assault, an alteration of conviction from one under S. 353 to one under S. 189 may be made by a court of appeal. A. I. If the facts which it was necessary to prove and on which evidence was given on the charge upon which the accused is actually tried are the same as the facts upon which he is to be convicted of the substantive offence, and if the accused is put to no disadvantage and would have had to adduce no further evidence, then he may be rightly convicted of the substantive offence notwithstanding that the charge was originally framed under Ss. 147, 148 or 149. The evidence which was given under the charge based upon S. 326 read with S. 149 was directly relevant to the issue under S. 326 read with S. 34. It was proved that the accused being present and armed with a deadly weapon gave an order to other persons armed with deadly weapons to assault the complainant. Although the element of an unlawful common object in the assembly as a whole which would be required to convict the accused persons under S. 326 read with S. 149 was missing, yet the accused formed an assembly within a wider assembly which smaller assembly had a common intention to cause grievous hurt and the complainant suffered injury at their hands. An accused was convicted by a jury of an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., and the verdict of the jury was accepted by the Sessions Judge. It was contended that the Judge used the jury as assessors in accepting the verdict for an offence with which the accused was not specifically charged and that therefore the High Court could go into the facts as if the verdict amounted to an opinion of the assessors.

Held, that the effect of S. 238, was to invest a jury trying an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., with authority to find that the facts proved only constitute a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty of such offence. It cannot be disputed that, in view of the charge under S. 307, I. P. C., the fact that no charge under S. 325 was framed is not even a defect or irregularity and, as such, curable under S. 537 (a), Cr. P. C., for the simple reason, that, under S. 238 (1), Cr. P. C. the accused was liable, without separate charge, to be convicted incidentally of the minor offence under S. 325 I. P. C. Several accused were tried together and fined under Ss. 379 and 447 stealing fish in the course of the same transaction; they were all separately engaged in fishing and there was no evidence of common object or common intention. They were merely several poachers gathered in the same place at the same time.

Held, that their joint trial was not a mere irregularity and that their conviction must be set aside. A. I. R. 1926 All. 334 and 33 Mad. 502, Ref. (Jackson, J.) SAMIULLAH SAHIB v. EMPEROR. 98 I. ## —S. 239—Conspiracy.

There is no misjoinder where the accused persons are charged as being parties to a criminal conspiracy to steal Government timber for a term of years and also with habitually receiving and dealing with that timber knowing or believing it to be stolen property during the same period in pursuance of the conspiracy. But if the charge is for habitually receiving stolen timber outside the said conspiracy, the trial will be bad and must be set aside as void. 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.), Dist. (Brown, J.) MAUNG BA CHIT v. EMPEROR. 122 I. C. 273 = 7 Rang. 821 = 31 Cr. L. J. 387 = 1930 Cr. C. 402 = A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 114.

Combination of charges is justified when the object all the accused had in view was common.

Accused 4 to 10 extorted from one S an agreement of sale. S then lodged a complaint in the matter with accused 3, a Police Inspector and gave him a bribe of Rs. 200 for creating interest to investigate this complaint. For the same purpose S also bribed accused 1 and 2 who were Deputy Superintendents of Police and Police Inspectors. But in the meantime accused 4 to 10 approached accused 3, who was bribed by paying Rs. 1,000 to hush up the matter. S's complaint was accordingly reported to be false. On these facts accused 1 to 3 were charged under Penal Code, Ss. 120-B, 161 and 163 for having conspired to take bribes from S and accused 4 to 10 in the course of police investigation; while accused 4 to 10 were charged under Penal Code, Ss. 120-B, 161, 163 and 114 for conspiring to offer bribe to accused 1 to 3.

Held, that the law punished the giver as well as the taker of the bribe, and the transaction must be regarded as one although there were two parties to it and separate offences might be said to be committed in respect of it. The mere fact that the sums received were different and were received at different times and places would not split up the transactions into so many separate transactions so as to require separate trials in respect of each of them. The common object which all the accused had in view was that the police investigation which accused 3 had in hand should be conducted by him not on its merits in the discharge of his public duty but corruptly in accordance with the illegal gratification paid. The prosecution were therefore justified in combining the four charges in one trial. (Mitra and Murphy, J.J.) EMPEROR v. C. E. RING. 120 I. C. 340 = 58 Bom. 479 = 31 Bom. L. J. 545 = 1929 Cr. tively, under S. 489-D that they all had in their possession materials for the purpose of being used or knowing or having reason to believe that it would be used for counterfeiting currency notes; (3) G and M counterfeited notes of Rs. 100 (S. 489-A); and (4) accused G used as genuine a counterfeit note of Rs. 100 knowing or having reason to believe that the same was counterfeit. At the trial, the charges of conspiracy and the charges laid against M and D were not proved and therefore, they were acquitted. G was found guilty of an offence under S. 489-B and sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for five years. On appeal to High Court,

Held, that although the prosecution in the result failed to prove conspiracy that of itself did not necessarily make the trial illegal, the test being, not what the prosecution has proved in the end, but what they alleged at the beginning in the charges. The offence of which G was found guilty formed part of the same transaction of conspiracy in the sense that it was the working, the fruit and the result of the alleged conspiracy and if so, the separate act done by any of the conspirators in pursuance of that conspiracy could be joined in the same trial. 30 Bom. 49; 42 Cal. 957, Rel. on. Two persons were charged under S. 193, Penal Code. Accused No. 1 was the plaintiff in a suit on a pro-note executed by the defendant. The defendant pleaded that Rs. 750 had been deducted as interest at the time of execution. Both the accused swore that Rs. 750 had not been deducted as interest. It was found that the evidence so given was untrue to their knowledge. The Magistrate found that the two accused were partners in this transaction, and accused No. 2 was interested in the sense that he had advanced part of the consideration to accused No. 1. In the complaint of the Court, which tried the suit, reference was made to offences under Ss. 193, 209 and 210 Penal Code, or attempt to commit offences under Ss. 209 and 210 read with S. 511; Penal Code, as regards accused No. 1. As regards accused No. 2 the offence referred to was one under S. 193 Penal Code. There was no reference there to any abetment of the offence of one accused by another, nor was there any reference to any conspiracy between the two as regards the giving of false evidence.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 239—False Evidence.

Held, (Per Shah, J.)—That the mere fact that the evidence is given by two or more witnesses with reference to the same purpose or to the same point involved in any judicial proceedings, either a suit or a criminal case, is not sufficient to justify the joint trial of different persons as to statements made by them separately in that proceeding. The deposition in the course of which the statement is made is a transaction by itself, and each witness making a statement in the witness box acts on his own account, and it is that act of his for which he is to be prosecuted. There may be cases in which the prosecution may allege abetment of perjury or conspiracy to commit perjury, and the evidence may be given as a part of the conspiracy formed by several persons together. In such a case on proper allegations it may be possible to secure a joint trial in respect of charges relating to making false statements in the course of depositions by different persons.

(Per Fawcett, J.)—On the allegations of the prosecution, and on the facts found, there is no sufficient reason for saying that the case does not properly fall within Cl. (1) of S. 239, Cr. P. Code, namely, that the two accused are persons accused of the same offence, committed in the course of the same transaction, i.e., the transaction in which there was an attempt by a suit to obtain a fraudulent decree for an amount not due. There was continuity of purpose, which satisfies the test as to what is the same transaction. That there is no allegation in the complaint of the charges of conspiracy or abetment is immaterial. There need not be a distinct accusation of abetment or attempt to bring the case under S. 239 (a).

(Crump, J.)—As there was a common purpose to make out a false claim so far was concerned the sum of Rs. 750, from the point of view of these two persons there was one transaction and their joint trial was not illegal. ## —S. 239—Gambling.

—Persons accused under U. P. Public Gambling Act, Ss 3 and 4 can be tried together.

No cast iron rule of law can be laid down on the question as to whether the keeper of a gambling den, if he frequents the said den and gambles there, could not be said to do so in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of S. 239. The words "same transaction" are not defined in the Code. The offences under Ss. 3 and 4, Public Gambling Act are interdependent and "are the complements of one another." A Court, therefore, is justified in trying two accused persons under Ss. 3 and 4 in the course of the same trial. A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 458; 6 P. R. 1919 Cr. and A. I. R. 1923 All. 88, Rel. on; 5 P. W. ## —S. 239—Joint trial.

—When further inquiry against the abettor of an offence who was previously discharged was directed, joint trial could not be held.

A complaint was filed against five persons under S. 325, Penal Code, the 1st being included as an abettor. Accused 1 was discharged on the ground of not being identified and charge was framed against the other four accused. On revision further inquiry was directed which was to give further opportunity to the prosecution witness to identify accused 1. Meanwhile proceedings against the other four accused had proceeded and prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined after the charge.

Held, that though ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender yet in this particular instance the proceedings had reached such a stage that a joint trial could not be ordered. A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 638, Ref. (Curguen, J.) SUBBAYA PILLAI v. SETHA IYER.

—S. 247—Interpretation.*—Acquittal under S. 247 bars further trial.

The meaning of the word "tried" in S. 403 (1) does not necessarily import a decision of a case on merits, but only refers to the nature of the proceedings that were had or, in other words, means that the proceedings in which the acquittal was passed were in the nature of a trial. Therefore an acquittal under S. 247 would bar a further trial under S. 403 (1). 34 Mad. 253, Appr. 40 Mad. 976; 7 C. W. N. 493 and 7 C. W. N. 711, Ref. (Mukerji and Graham, JJ.) *SUKU RAM KOCH v. ## —S. 247—Restoration.

A Court which has acted under S. 247, Cr. P. Code, has no power suo motu to restore the case and cancel the acquittal. The only remedy of the complainant is to move the High Court in revision. (Jackson, J.)

—S. 247—Revision.

An acquittal under S. 247 stands on the same footing as an acquittal ordered in any other circumstances, as for instance under S. 258 and upon an application in revision an acquittal should very rarely be set aside. High Court will not interfere in revision when there is no error of law on the face of the record. 38 Mad. 1028 and 51 M. L. J. 730=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1009, Foll. —High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision in the case of an acquittal, since the Local Government can appeal, but this rule does not properly apply to an acquittal under S. 247 and in any case the rule will not prevent interference by this Court when the acquittal is the result of an improper clutching at jurisdiction. ## —S. 247—Right to acquittal.

The right to an order of acquittal accrues to the accused upon two conditions, and is dependent, firstly, on the absence of the complainant and secondly on the Court not adjourning the case. If a case is not taken up at all, it cannot be said that the second condition is fulfilled, for there is no knowing in what way the Court's discretion would have been exercised if it had been taken up. 96 I. C. 878=27 Cr. L. J. 1022=
A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 628.

—S. 248—Grounds.

—There is no absolute power of withdrawal; before a withdrawal can be permitted, there must be sufficient grounds to the satisfaction of the Magistrate. (C. C. Ghose and Duval, J.J.) SISHIR KUMAR v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

—S. 248—Scope.

—The provisions of S. 248 have not been affected or abrogated by the provisions of S. 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, which is merely an enabling section and the powers given thereunder to do the various acts specified therein can only be exercised in accordance with the provisions of the Code. ## —S. 248—Several accused.

—Withdrawal against one is not effectual against others. (Contra Harrison, J.)

Per Harrison, J.—The withdrawal of a case is by no means the same as compounding an offence. The section does not contemplate a partial withdrawal nor withdrawal against one of several alleged offenders. There is no difference in the procedure to be followed in withdrawing a complaint of a compoundable nature and one which is not compoundable.

Per A. Raoof, J.—Whether a petition is one for withdrawal or compromise is to be judged from the fact whether the accused consented to it or not. The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom an offence has been committed has received some gratification to act as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from prosecution. The distinction between a withdrawal and composition is pointed out in 21 C. 103 at 112.

Per Le Rossignol, J.—It is a question of fact whenever a complaint is withdrawn under S. 248, whether it is withdrawn as a whole or in part. If the withdrawal of a complaint, implied the physical withdrawal of the document on which the complaint is written it could be contended that the complaint is withdrawn against all the persons implicated; but where the complainant states circumstances which may or may not satisfy the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting the complainant to withdraw the complaint against one or all of the accused that does not amount to complete withdrawal; there is nothing in S. 248 which involves a withdrawal of the whole complaint merely because the complaint is withdrawn against one of the accused. 20 C. ## —S. 250—Appeal.

—Though S. 250 (3) gives the complainant a right to appeal against an order for compensation in certain cases the section does not indicate a forum, which has to be found out by reference to Chap. 31. The appeal would therefore lie under S. 250 (3) coupled with the relevant section in Chap. 31, viz., S. 407, and all the provisions in that chapter including the power to take additional evidence given by S. 428 apply. A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 391 and 33 Mad. 90. Dist. (Beasley, C. J. and Pandalai, J.) V. SEENIAH NAIDU v. ABDUL WAHAB SAHIB. 123 I. C. 809 = 1930 Cr. C. 507 = 31 M. L. W. 524 = 31 Cr. L. J. 602 = A. I. —A complainant who has been ordered to give compensation under S. 250 has the right of appeal whenever compensation awarded exceeds Rs. 50 in the aggregate whether this amount is payable to one accused or distributed amongst several accused. Therefore no revision lies in such a case. (Barlee, J. C. and Aston, A. J. C.) SHAFI MAHOMED v. KAMRUDDIN. 118 I. C. 215 = 30 Cr. L. J. 905 = 1929 Cr. C. 452 = A. I. R. 1929 Sind 176.

—There is nothing in S. 250 to show that an appeal will only lie when the compensation directed to be paid to each individual accused is more than Rs. 50. Under sub Sec. (3) a complainant who has been ordered by a Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding Rs. 50 has the right of appeal. It is the total amount of compensation directed to be paid by the complainant which must form the basis of the decision whether an appeal lies or not. (Adami and Macpherson, J.J.) *SOBHIT MALLAH v. —S. 250—Frivolous or vexatious charge.

—In a trial under Chap. 22, after the evidence was closed and the impression made by it on the Bench was fresh in their mind, the Bench called upon the complainant to show cause why compensation should not be granted in this wise: "The case brought by you has been proved to be false and vexatious and it is clear that this has been brought simply to harass the accused. Please show cause why compensation should not be ordered?" The complainant answered that the case brought by him was true. The Bench holding that it was no explanation ordered compensation.

Held, that although the passage that the case was brought simply to harass the accused, occurred as a portion of the question, it must have been intended as record of their own reason for thinking that the complaint was false and vexatious and hence satisfied the requirements of S. 250; (Pandit, J.) PALANI GOUNDAN v. —The Court should find that the complaint was vexatious.

Section 250 shows that the Court must first be of the opinion that a case is either false and frivolous or vexatious to justify him in calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation. It is necessary after hearing complainant's explanation that he should still be of the opinion that the case is either false and frivolous or vexatious. To pass an order under S. 250 Court's final opinion should be that the case was false and frivolous or vexatious not that the explanation was unsatisfactory. (*Percival, J. C. and Aston, A. J. —Reasons must be recorded which are meant for higher tribunal to test justification of order.

The recording of the reasons, for ordering compensation to be paid, is almost a condition precedent to the proper exercise of the power under the section. The recording of the reasons is in addition to the finding of the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious and why in his opinion it was a fit case, in which an order for compensation should be made. The policy of the legislature in requiring that in such a case the reasons should be recorded in writing is obviously to afford an opportunity to an appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons so recorded. —S. 252—Additional evidence.

—When the complainant producing more witnesses after the original witnesses, Magistrate should not ordinarily refuse.

Section 252 of the Code means first that the complainant should himself produce what evidence he can in support of the prosecution and the Magistrate shall proceed to hear it. The Court is apparently not bound to issue process for such witnesses, or to grant time for the production of such witnesses, but if produced he must record their evidence. Next when the complainant has done all he can without the assistance of the process of the Court it is then for the Magistrate to ascertain from the complainant or otherwise the names of other persons likely or able to give evidence, and he must summon such of those as he thinks necessary, i.e., such of those as he thinks will be of value in assisting the prosecution case. He cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon such witnesses. It is his duty to assist and not to hamper the prosecution, and for that purpose he must issue summons to persons of whom complainant has informed him, who he considers are likely to give useful evidence. The Magistrate is not bound to or expected to exercise this duty of ascertaining more than once, and the proper time is when the evidence "produced" in support of the prosecution has been taken, and that ordinarily includes the cross-examination, if any and re-examination, if any before the charge. A useful test will be whether, if the accused were acquitted in this case, it would be open to the complainant to put in a fresh complaint on the facts put forward. A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 609 (F.B.) Ref. —Once the machinery of the law has been set in motion, the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone.

The procedure in warrant cases is laid down in S. 252. This section clearly contemplates that once action has been taken against an accused the case will normally proceed. It is nowhere contemplated that a desire on the part of the complainant to refrain from further pursuing the case shall justify the arrest of further proceedings. It is always open to the Magistrate, after hearing whatever evidence he considers necessary (S. 252) or even at an earlier stage to discharge the accused (S. 253) if for reasons to be recorded by him he considers the charge to be groundless. If the trying Magistrate considered that although the charge was not groundless, there was little likelihood of the case being pursued to a successful issue, he could consult the District Magistrate who would, if advisable, instruct the Public Prosecutor under S. 494 to withdraw the case. The complainant or the accused could similarly move the District Magistrate in the matter. The principle underlying the provisions dealing with the trial of non-compoundable or cognizable warrant cases is that whether instituted on complaint or otherwise the final responsibility for the conduct of such cases rests with the State and that where there is reasonable ground for believing that an offence has been committed, once the machinery of the law has been set in motion, the right of arresting its progress rests with the State alone. Where summons was issued to a witness but on the application of the complainant the Magistrate declined to send for and examine him together with certain other witnesses, as they in his opinion appeared to have been included with a view to cause vexation to those witnesses themselves;

Held, that though he should not have acted on the representation of the complainant, he was perfectly justified, when the matter was brought to his notice that certain witnesses were cited only for the purpose of causing vexation and delay, in ordering that they should not be compelled to appear in his Court. —In refusing to commit to Sessions, the Magistrate must be satisfied of the untenability of the charge.

Where the Magistrate who held the enquiry for committing a person to Sessions, under the orders of the Superior Court, after recording the prosecution evidence, discharged the person and where such person had originally formed one of those against whom the report in connection with the offence had been made and where he was subsequently dropped out of the proceeding by the senior investigating officer.

Held, that the Magistrate had not acted properly in refusing in spite of the Superior Court's order to commit the accused to Sessions and that it was a case in which the Court empowered to try the offence charged against the accused should give a definite pronouncement. There is no necessity compelling a Magistrate to convict an accused to Sessions notwithstanding that he may consider conviction to be impossible. But the Magistrate must be satisfied fully that the prosecution will fail in the Sessions Court. The law will not be satisfied if the Magistrate merely doubts portion of the prosecution evidence. The discretion vested in the Magistrate to discharge an accused charged with an offence triable only by Court of Sessions must be exercised properly and very carefully. (*Pullan, A. J. The mere fact that the matter is one of rendition of accounts and must be referred to the civil Court is obviously insufficient to justify an order of discharge under S. 253 (2) in a case of alleged breach of trust. To say that no case has been made out is not tantamount to saying the charge is 'groundless.' Where a complaint prima facie discloses an offence, a Magistrate cannot hold the charge to be groundless unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced to prove it; and he can only judicially come to such a conclusion when he has at least ascertained from the complainant what is the nature of the evidence his witnesses are going to give. —Where a Magistrate discharges the accused without allowing the complainant to adduce all his evidence, it cannot be said that there is a full and complete inquiry in the case, and the order of the District Magistrate directing full inquiry should not be interfered with. —The provision that the accused should be asked whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which he is called upon to plead to the charge, inserted in S. 256 by the amending Act of 1923 by words "at the commencement of the next hearing," is obviously intended to give the accused an interval of time to think out the lines of his defence before he is called upon to inform the Court how he intends to proceed and an omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial. 7 L. It is not so much the recording of the reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question if the provisions of S. 256 have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming, merely recording them in writing by the Magistrate would not save the trial from the taint of an incurable irregularity if it results in prejudice to the accused. Under S. 256 read with S. 72 of the amendment of 1923 where the accused is represented by a vakil from the outset, he may generally be asked if he wishes to cross-examine forthwith, for the simple reason that the accused will not be prejudiced and it is convenient to arrange a date for the subsequent attendance of the prosecution witnesses before they disperse. If, however, he is asked forthwith, with a view to recalling the witness forthwith fuller reasons will be required. If an accused is not represented by a vakil, reason must be shown for not postponing the question to the next hearing by which time he can have consulted a vakil and the omission to give reasons is an irregularity not curable under S. 537. A Magistrate held an enquiry and committed the accused to the Sessions on a charge of bigamy. Owing to the amendment of the Cr. P. Code, the offence of bigamy ceased to be exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions and the case was sent back to the trying Magistrate for disposal. The prosecution witnesses, who had been examined and cross-examined, were then re-called and cross-examined again. The complainant

It is for the Magistrate to enquire into the accused's purpose if he thinks the application may be vexatious, and, therefore, where the Magistrate has issued the process, he is not justified in refusing to allow the witnesses to be dealt with for the purpose for which the accused wanted them to be summoned. While the Court is fully justified in declining to accede to request which would amount to an abuse of process of the Court, it should at the same time be careful not to do any act which might hamper the accused in his defence. In a trial of an accused under S. 500, after charges had been framed against him, he applied to the Court to issue summonses to 19 witnesses. The Magistrate disallowed the six witnesses and ordered that the remaining could be summoned provided he paid the necessary process fees and expenses.

Held, that the order directing the deposit of expenses was not right because in warrant cases the usual rule is that the costs of causing the attendance of an accused person's witnesses are usually borne by the Crown and no adequate reason had been assigned for a departure

—If court thinks it to be vexatious or meant to defeat or delay ends of justice, it may refuse to summon any of the witnesses but it cannot order accused to pay for their costs.

The ordinary procedure in warrant cases is that the costs of causing the attendance of accused's necessary witnesses is usually borne by Government. The Magistrate has no doubt authority to depart from this usual practice, but there should be strong and cogent reasons for making the departure. Where the Magistrate finds that the accused has given a long list of witnesses to defeat or delay the ends of justice, he may decline to compel their attendance, under sub-S. (1), but at the same time he must be careful not to do any act which might hamper the accused in his defence. The Court should, in a case of this kind, adopt a reasonable course which would, while avoiding any hardship on either side, promote the ends of justice. (Shadi Lal, C. J.) *SAIVOD HABIB v. —The accused, even after he has entered upon his defence, is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross-examination, unless the Magistrate considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it was made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of Justice. The section itself however gives the Magistrate certain powers to refuse an application for the summoning of witnesses under S. 257 whether it is the case of a witness who is desired to be called for the defence or whether it is desired only to cross-examine. The mere fact that an accused's lawyers declined to cross-examine such witnesses or the mere fact that such witnesses were not cross-examined does not compel Court to summon them. —S. 257—Provisions mandatory.

The provisions laid down by S. 257 (2) are mandatory and imperative. When an accused person has entered upon his defence he ought to be allowed every reasonable facility in establishing his defence and the Magistrate is bound to issue any process for enforcing the attendance of a witness required by the accused person, unless the Magistrate is convinced that the accused wants that witness not in the interest of justice but for purpose of vexation and delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Where the Magistrate does not record in writing the grounds on which the application should be refused, the trial is vitiated. The omission to comply with the provisions is an illegality and not a mere irregularity and the defect cannot be cured by S. 537.

But it is competent for the appellate Court to direct the trial Court to comply with the provisions of law as contained in S. 257, where the same has not been done with microscopic exactness; and where the lacuna contained in the procedure of the trial Court is removed the applicant ought not to have any cause of grievance. The language of Ss. 264 and 265 when read with S. 262 and 263 makes it clear that in no summary trial whether it be appealable or non-appealable need a formal charge in writing be framed. S. 264 (2) especially when read with the opening words of S. 265, makes it clear that the judgment and the judgment alone, embodying as it does, the substance of the evidence and the particulars mentioned in S. 263, is the self-contained record of the case, and apart from this record, there is no other, and what is more there is no document, which can be defined or described as a portion of a record. ## —S. 264—Substance of evidence.

—Judgment containing necessary substance is legal.

The substance of the evidence required by S. 264 is a matter distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence and it should be recorded in such a manner that a superior Court acting in appeal or revision may be in a position to judge that there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction. A Magistrate is not bound to record substance of every deposition. He has to state the substance of witnesses' evidence. A judgment when it contains the substance of the evidence, which is sufficient for convicting the accused is a legal judgment. (Raza, J.)

CR. P. CODE (1898).

S. 265—Intention.

—Judgment signed only by Chairman and omission to sign by all is mere irregularity.

The intention of S. 265 is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written, they shall be signed by all the members present. The words "presiding officer of the Court" do not afford any assistance in the construction of S. 265 and do not show that the judgment may be signed only by the Chairman of the Benches; they are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments. But the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality and thus where all the members of the Bench sign the register, in which the sentences are embodied, and thus agree in the judgment, their omission to comply with the technical requirements of the law in the fact that the judgment is signed only by the chairman is a mere irregularity which occasions no failure of justice. —The translation of the charge to the juryman who did not know English by the Public Prosecutor was not bad.

Where one of the jurymen in a case had not an adequate knowledge of English and when the peshkar commenced to translate the Judge's charge in the vernacular, it was found to be unsatisfactory because of his lack of sufficient knowledge of English, whereupon it was arranged that the Public Prosecutor being the best man available as regards translating capacity would translate the charge to the jury, the mukhtear for the defence being told that if he wanted to object to any translation he was at liberty to object then and there and the verdict of the jury was unanimous.

Held, that there was no reason to think that this particular juryman was not given the benefit of the correct translation of the Judge's charge and it was a fair trial and the accused was in no way prejudiced. Held, that the trial was void as being without jurisdiction. The trial of an offence under S. 149 read with S. 436 is a trial under S. 436 as the Court must always first determine whether the offence under S. 436 has been committed by an individual and next whether S. 149 makes the participants responsible. —Re-trial should be only for offences triable with assessors in respect of which alone irregularity has taken place.

The accused were tried under S. 235 for several offences, some triable by jury and others triable with the aid of assessors. On the charges triable by the jury, the accused were acquitted, but for offences triable with the aid of assessors they were convicted. The opinion of all the jurors as assessors was not taken and consequently on appeal the case was remanded for re-trial. At the second trial, the accused were tried only for the charges triable with the aid of assessors.

Held per Ross, J.—Retrial should not be of all the offences including those triable by jury, but only for such offences as were tried with the aid of the assessors.

It seems clearly opposed to principle, that where there has been a verdict of a jury acquitting the prisoners of certain charges and that verdict has not been impugned by way of appeal by the Crown, the prisoners should again be put in peril for the same offences.

Per Kulwant Sahay, J.—S. 269 (3) provides for certain advantages to the accused, such as trial by jurors as assessors for offences not triable by jury and it would be manifestly illegal to deprive him of such advantages by splitting up the trial. Therefore, order for retrial opened the whole case and the accused could have been tried again for all the offences they were charged with. —Failure to write a separate judgment in a case where the procedure laid down by S. 269 (3) is followed, does not vitiate the trial.

An accused was tried by a jury with an offence punishable under S. 395, Penal Code, and was acquitted being found not guilty. The Judge stated both cases for the benefit of jury and his summing up covered both the charges.

trates in the mofussal. If the Magistrate rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such appeal. This applies to the Presidency Magistrates as well as to Magistrates in the mofussal. If the Magistrate rejects the claim and commits him to the Court of Session, he may repeat the claim before the said Court. Such repetition may only be made in a Court of Session and not the High Court exercising Original Criminal Jurisdiction. If the Court of Session rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial. It necessarily follows that if a claim is made before a Presidency Magistrate and rejected by him and the accused is committed to the High Court, there is no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, and the accused will not be entitled to put in, under S. 275 of Cr. P. Code, before the High Court, a further claim for being tried by a jury the majority of whom should be Indians. Where no such claim is put forward before a Magistrate, there being no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, S. 528-B is a bar to the assertion of the same in any subsequent stage of the case. S. 276 provides, in the first instance, for a ballot among the persons summoned under S. 326, all of whom may or may not be present. When their names have been exhausted, if a jury has not yet been empanelled, the Court may in its discretion allow the number requisite to complete the jury to be chosen from among the bystanders, or may adjourn the case for a fresh jury to be summoned. As each name is drawn and called aloud if the person summoned answers, or as each juror is chosen from among the bystanders, should that point have been reached and that course be permitted, the accused shall be asked, if he objects to be tried by such juror. Should the objection be allowed, the Court should proceed as laid down in S. 279 (2), adopting the course prescribed according as there are, or are not persons left from among those summoned whose names have not been drawn. ## —Interpretation.

The word "deficiency" and "number of jurors required" in the second proviso to S. 276 mean deficiency in the number of jurors required to make up the jury and not to make up a sufficient number for the purpose of selection by lot. (Suhrawardy and Cammiade, J.J.) RAHAMAT SHEIKH v. EMPEROR. 54 Cal. 1026 = 31 C. W. N. 711 = 28 Cr. L. J. 615 = 102 I. C. 903 = 8 A. I. R. 265 = A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 593.

—If jurors are not selected by lot it vitiates trial.

Where out of the jurors summoned to attend the Court, only such number of jurors is present as is necessary to form a quorum, proper course is for the Judge to make good the deficit by choosing some other persons who are present, add their names to the jurors that are present and from the whole body to choose the necessary jurors by lot to act as the jury. Omission to follow this course and empanel only the jurors that are present is an irregularity of a very grave and material nature inasmuch as it affects the proper constitution of the Court. 7 C. W. ## —S. 276—Objection.

—No objection was taken to the original selection of the jurors, eight of whom were present in the Court, and instead of conducting a second ballot, as required by R. 14, Ch. V, Oudh Criminal Rules, the Judge chose five out of the eight present. The Judge asked the accused whether they had any objection to this selection but they had none.

Held, that the irregularity was covered by S. 537, and did not vitiate trial. 8 Cal. 739, Foll.; 33 All. 385, Not. Foll. (Razz and Pullan, J.J.) RAM ADHIN v. EMPEROR. 114 I. C. 814 = 6 O. W. N. 97 = 30 Cr. L. J. 384 = A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 154.

—In a trial by jury requiring a panel of five jurors, only five jurors were present in Court although ten were summoned. The Court drew the lot including those jurors who were absent and some absent jurors were also chosen by the lot, but they being absent, the Judge obtained substitutes for them by the process of elimination. No objection was taken to any juror.

Held, that the trial was not illegal and the irregularity if any, was cured by S. 537. A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 242, Diss. from. 8 Cal. 739, Foll. (Ross, Allanson, and Wort, J.J.) WORT, J. Dismissing. —Jurors not chosen by lot—Irrregularity is curable under S. 537 (a).

In jury trials it is desirable, if not necessary that the Judge should specifically state that the jurors have been chosen by lot. Where, however, the Court did not choose the jurors by any strict process of lot, but simply selected five jurors out of the gentlemen summoned to act as such and present in Court.

Held, that the irregularity is curable under S. 537 (a) as being only an irregularity in the proceedings before or during trial. If under S. 536 (2) a trial, by mistake without a jury is curable, it is a reductio ad absurdum to postulate that where the composition of the jury was not objected to by the appellant or his counsel, the proceedings should be held to be bad merely because the jurors were not selected by lot. 33 All. 385; 7 C. ## —S. 276—Principle.

—"Required" in S. 276, Prov. 2, refers to "persons summoned" — "Chosen" means "chosen by lot."

The object of Ss. 276-279 is to secure an impartial trial by rendering impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case. An accused person has a right to claim to be tried by a jury chosen with strict regard to all the safeguards provided in the code to secure perfect impartiality. The central idea is to have a jury chosen by lot from the persons summoned to act as jurors. In other words, in ordinary cases, five persons are to be chosen by lot for the purpose of acting as a jury out of ten persons summoned to act as jurors. In murder trials seven or nine persons, as the case may be, are to be chosen by lot for the purpose of acting as a jury out of 14 or 18 persons summoned to act as jurors. In case, however, of a deficiency of persons summoned, i.e., where the persons attending in obedience to the summonses, are less than the number summoned the number of jurors required may with the leave of the Court be chosen from such other persons as may be present. Proviso 2 to S. 276 has been introduced to meet a case where there is a deficiency of persons summoned, and the word "required" in the proviso must refer and is relative to the words immediately preceding, namely, "in case of a deficiency of persons summoned". Therefore, if there is a deficiency of persons summoned to act as jurors it is this deficiency that under the proviso may be made good from such other persons as might be present in Court, and the meaning of the word "chosen" in the proviso must mean "chosen by lot". In so far as S. 279(2) permits a person not chosen by lot to be empanelled, it certainly introduces an exception to the general rule, but this is only in the exceptional condition stated and in emergent circumstances. —The provisions of Ss. 326 and 276, are imperative and their violation will render the constitution of the Court illegal. It is not a question of jurisdiction, but more a question relating to the constitution or even the very existence of a valid forum; much less is it an irregularity curable by S. 537, or with the consent of parties. Held, that it is not correct to say that the accused was wholly unrepresented and that it was open to the defence to challenge the jurors as their names were called out, but, as the junior pleader did not challenge anybody but contented himself by saying that he was only a junior, the constitution of the jury cannot be assailed. —S. 286—Duty of Prosecution.

—Statements allowed to be read—Judge omitting to warn jury not to pay attention to the contents of the complaint—Omission amounts to misdirection.

Per Rankin, C. J.—So far as criminal cases are concerned the opening for the prosecution ought always to be confined to matters which are necessary to establish the jury to follow the evidence when it is brought before them. This is not the stage of a case where a doubtful question of admissibility should be either raised or decided. Whether a document is admissible or inadmissible is a matter which should always be ruled upon at the time when the document is being proved or put in or the question asked of the witnesses. In many cases a thing may be good evidence at one stage of the cases and inadmissible at another. It is frequently necessary to give evidence to lay the foundation which justifies a question or the putting in of a document. The opening speech of the counsel for the prosecution does not afford a proper occasion for the determining of such questions.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—In a criminal trial, counsel for the prosecution, in opening the case to the jury, can only state all that it is proposed or intended to prove in the case, so that the jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statement of the counsel and the evidence afterwards adduced in support of them and it is wholly improper for the counsel for the prosecution to open any matter to the jury in respect whereof no evidence is intended to be read or can be adduced at the trial. Very great care must be taken by counsel for the prosecution in the observation to be made to the jury and that topics of prejudice connected with the character of the prisoner should be carefully excluded. P was prosecuted for selling R for immoral purposes under S. 372, Penal Code. In this trial P had managed to put in a copy of birth register showing that R was of 18 years. P was ultimately acquitted. Proceedings were subsequently taken against P under Ss, 193 and 471, Penal Code for having used as genuine a forged document (copy of birth register of R) knowing it to be forged document. When the case began before the Court of Sessions the counsel for the prosecution insisted upon reading to the jury in his opening speech the whole of R's complaint against P in S. 372 Penal Code case, which contained highly prejudicial matters that P was of loose morals, that he was notorious for seducing girls, that he used to keep such girls as concubines and that he had assaulted and raped R on diverse occasions. Counsel for the accused objected to its being read but the objection was overruled.

Held, that an atmosphere of prejudice had been allowed to be created and that there were grave reasons for concluding that the chances of P in obtaining a fair trial at the hands of the jury were seriously jeopardized. The allegations in the petition of R were such as must have and could not but have influenced the jury against P at the very beginning of the trial. The jury in the circumstances could not possibly get out of their minds the fact that P was a depraved person. This was specially unfortunate because the Judge in the course of his charge to the jury did not tell the jury as he should have done, that the petition of complaint had not been admitted as evidence in the case, that the contents thereof which were objected to were irrelevant to the matter in issue at the trial before the jury, and that the jury ought not to pay any attention whatever to the contents of that petition. This was non-direction and it was non-direction of such a character as to amount to misdirection. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose, Suhrwardy, Mukerji and Jack, J.J.) PADAM PRASAD v. EMPEROR. 50 C. —It is the duty of the prosecution to place before the Court all the available witnesses.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—In a capital case it is undoubtedly the duty of the Public Prosecutor to place before the trial Court the testimony of all available witnesses. This salubrious rule should be adhered to for the ends of justice and the prosecution should not be left the option of choosing witnesses who would support the prosecution case and withholding those who would not. Unless it is shown by facts and circumstances in the case that the witnesses were withheld because they would not tell the truth, the prosecution should not be left the option to choose. To allow such an option is to create embarrassment. The Court should have the whole of the material evidence and of all eye-witnesses whether in favour of or hostile to the prosecution so as to form its own opinion upon the entire evidence. 10 C. L. —Evidence before committing Magistrate—Amended section does not preclude its use as substantive evidence in Sessions Court.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 288—Effect of amendment

S. 288 is intended to enable the Court to read the evidence in the committing Magistrate's Court as substantive evidence in the case at the trial where, for the purposes of justice, the adoption of such a course is found necessary by the Judge. 27 Cal. 295, Ref. In using the words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872", the intention of the Legislature was to prevent the admission of irrelevant evidence in the Sessions Court merely on the ground that it had been recorded by the committing Magistrate. The committing Magistrate might well record through inadvertence hearsay evidence or statements made by the accused persons to the Police in the absence of a Magistrate. (*Kincaid and Aston, A. J. ## —S. 288—Evidentiary value.

—Previous statements of witnesses—Admissibility considered.

Previous statements of witnesses are only ordinarily admissible to corroborate or contradict the witnesses who have made statements at the trial, or by virtue of S. 288. The latter section should only be employed when there is reason to believe that a witness at the trial is deliberately departing from the evidence which he gave before the Magistrate and where it is considered by the trial Judge desirable to bring the whole statement made before the Magistrate on record as substantive evidence. As to corroborating a witness it is unnecessary for the prosecution to corroborate their witnesses by previous statements until the statement made at the trial has been, in one way or another, challenged. As to contradicting a witness, it is not in accordance with law to use his statement made on a previous occasion, until the particular statement, by means of which it is desired to contradict the witness is put to him and he is asked what explanation he can give. In neither of these two latter cases is the previous statement itself substantive evidence. (Boys and Young, J.J.) ABDUL JALIL KHAN v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1002 = 1930 A. L. J. 1105 = A. I. —Weight to be given to the previous evidence depends on facts of each case, but it cannot be utilized to support conviction unless there is other evidence to corroborate it.

The deposition recorded by the committing Magistrate can be utilized at the trial if the matter contained therein is according to the rules of evidence laid down in the Evidence Act, of evidential value. To limit the admissibility of such evidence at the trial only to cases where the evidence is admissible under the Evidence Act would be to frustrate the object in enacting S. 288. A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 51, Rel. on. It is difficult to lay down any precise rule as regards the weight to be placed on a piece of evidence admitted at the trial. Each case will depend upon its own peculiar facts and the nature of the other evidence adduced in the case. It can, however, be said that if a witness makes two contradictory statements, his evidence cannot be implicitly relied upon and must be taken with a good deal of caution. Unless there is clearly present besides the evidence given before the Magistrate, evidence which will show that the evidence given before the Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for that given before the Sessions Judge, the evidence given before the Magistrate cannot be effectively utilized in support of a conviction. —Evidence recorded under S. 288 can be acted upon precisely as if it had been deposed to before Sessions Judge.

The evidence of a witness which has been recorded under the provisions of S. 288, may be acted upon by the Court precisely as if that evidence had been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The amending words "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872" merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in that Act must be complied with. For instance, evidence, which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate, in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act, could not be transferred to the Session's file. —Depositions before committing Magistrate is on the same footing as those in the Sessions Court.

Under S. 288 the Court is not restricted to using the evidence before the committing Magistrate only for the purpose of contradicting the witness at the trial. The section is intended to enable a Court to read the pre-vicious evidence as substantive evidence at the trial where for the purpose of justice the adoption of such a course is found necessary by the judge. Where there is clearly a conspiracy to suppress the names of assailants in the Sessions Court but there is corroboration of statements made under S. 288 in all material respects except this, the Sessions Judge is perfectly justified in order to attain the ends of justice in regarding the statements under S. 288 as substantive evidence in the trial. Where there are equally balanced stories, one story in the Sessions Court and the second story as told before the committing Magistrate, it is as a matter of discretion unsafe to prefer the latter, rather than the former. (28 All. 683 and 24 Mad. 415. Foll.) Where the witnesses are so careless of truth as to abandon readily on oath what they have previously sworn on oath their statements on any point should not be accepted without great caution and sound judicial reasons for accepting as true anything they have said. Sometimes this principle has been interpreted in particular cases to mean that sound judicial reasons are absent unless there is independent corroboration on material particulars. 27 Cal. 295, 21 All. 111 and 22 All. 445, 43 M. The view that S. 288 can only be utilised in such cases as the Evidence Act specifically provides is wrong as that Act has no such special provision. On the other hand, to hold that S. 288 can be utilized in all cases, except those in which the Evidence Act directly prohibits such use, would render the amendment of 1923 quite useless. A Judge is bound to explain the law to the jury with clearness and distinctness and failure to do so prejudices the trial. Where the Judge withholds from the jury the legal assistance, the assistance in points of law, which the case demands he fails in his duty. So also the Judge ought not to omit to state in his charge that if the jury entertains a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused they are bound to return the verdict that the accused is not guilty. Accused not pleading exception.

The mere fact that the accused persons do not admit that they were present at the occurrence or raise a case of provocation or that of passion, etc., does not render it unnecessary to give the jury a proper direction as to the exceptions. The question is whether on any reasonable view of the facts, certain of the exceptions can matter. If they can matter and if a proper direction is not given to the jury, then it is not open to the Court to guess and gamble as to whether or not the jury's verdict would have been different. Unlawful assembly.

In making the charge to the jury with respect to accused in an unlawful assembly case the judge must be careful to see whether there has been any change in the common object of the assembly in the course of the occurrence. For the common object of an unlawful assembly can change as the occurrence progresses. So it may be that there are various common objects in the course of an occurrence and it is the business of the judge in his charge to the jury to place all these common objects that there may have been, before the jury to enable the jury to decide if any of them has been proved against the accused and if so which of them. —In a case triable by a jury, the charges should be few and simple, and so readily capable of explanation by the Judge that the jury will have no difficulty in appreciating the law which they have to apply to the facts of the case before them. The charge should shortly state the salient points in the case, the evidence adduced in it and the points for determination to the jury with reference to the law. A multitude of charges covering offences subtly distinguished from one another is enough to confuse a jury and cause a mistrial. (Suhrawardy and Page, J.J.) JABANULLAH v. EMPEROR.

The duty of a Judge is to help the jury to arrive at a proper verdict of the facts, and with that in view it is far better to use the plainest and simplest language in his charge. Also if he does express his opinion on the facts he should do it in such a way as makes it quite clear to the jurors that he is not in any way seeking to usurp their functions or to interfere in matters the decision of which is exclusively within the competence of the jury itself. There is no prohibition in law forbidding a Judge to read to a jury in his charge from a judgment, though in practice it is not desirable to refer and read from several law reports, as it may have the effect of confusing the minds of laymen. Yet the jury are entitled to ask and the Judge is entitled to read passages from judgments for guidance of the jury, and such reading does not amount to misdirection. (*Rutledge, C. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 297—Charge to jury—Nature.

The proper way to charge the jury in a case under S. 368, I.P.C. would be to place before the jury the evidence, the direct evidence of knowledge as given of the abduction of the girl, to point out the strength and weakness of that evidence, to tell them that this was the only evidence relating to the knowledge, and then to place before them the circumstances, if any, which might raise an inference of knowledge on the part of the accused that the girl was an abducted girl; and lastly to ask the jury to draw their own conclusion on that question. To place before the jury the suspicion in the mind of the accused and the reasonable cause for such suspicion and also direct evidence as to knowledge on his part will have the effect of obliterating from the mind of the jury any distinction they may entertain between knowledge and suspicion. A defect of this nature on a crucial point is likely to vitiate the verdict. (Suhrawardy and M. N. Mukerji, JJ.) GADADHAR SARKAR v. EMPEROR. 87 I. C. 845 =

—S. 297—Charge to jury—Procedure.

—Interpretation of charge.

The right course for a Judge is to charge the jury himself; but where there are difficulties in the way of doing this, as when the Judge does not happen to be sufficiently acquainted with the vernacular language so as to be understood by the jury, his delivering the charge through some other man is not improper. The important thing is that the review of the evidence made by the learned Judge should be placed before the jury in a manner which they can understand. (Lindsay, Ag.C.J.) SUR NATH BHADURI v. EMPEROR. 105 I. C. 662 = 25 A.L.J. 1077 = 8 A.I.Cr.R. 342 = 8 L.R.A. Cr. 140 = 28 Cr. L. J. 950 = A. I. R. 1927 All. 721.

—The Judge should warn the jury that the statement of the accused not amounting to confession cannot be considered against the co-accused.

A charge to the Jury must be read as a whole and if upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the Jury's province there is no misdirection. 41 Cal. 1023, Foll. (*Kennedy, J. —S. 297—Charge to jury—Re-charge.

—Cross-examination of jury.

When in case of an unintelligible verdict from a jury, a Judge thinks it better to re-charge the jury on specific points there is nothing in the Cr. P. Code to prevent him from doing so. In such a matter it is most unsatisfactory for a Judge to cross-examine the jury which as a matter of fact means cross-examination of the foreman of the jury. (*Rankin, C. J. and C. C. —S. 297—Charge to jury—Recording.

—In a Judge does not write his charge before delivery which whenever practical is the better course, he should reduce the charge to writing as soon as possible after charging the jury so that what he said is fresh in his mind. A delay makes it impossible for an appellate Court to know whether the written charge was really the charge which was given to the jury. (Young, J.) JAGMOHAN SINGH v. EMPEROR.

—It is unquestionably desirable that the record of the charge on question of law should be sufficiently full to show whether the elements constituting the offences charged have been properly and fully explained to the jury. But where the law regarding the offence charged has been fully explained to the jury, the fact that the Judge has failed to note the same on the record is not sufficient to set aside the conviction. The existing practice of taking a shorthand note of the charge of the learned Judge presiding at the Criminal Sessions of the Rangoon High Court only in cases of murder strongly deprecated. In cases where an appeal lies, or where an application is made to the Government Advocate for a fiat, it is essential that there should be an official record of the charge the learned judge delivered to the jury. 28 C. —Omission to put in F. J. R.

Where the witnesses named as eye-witnesses in the original complaint were not examined, it would be improper to tell the jury that they were entitled to draw inference adverse to the prosecution unless in evidence it appears that no satisfactory reasons for non-examination were forthcoming. It is not the duty of the Court to inform the jury that several witnesses in committing Court did not support the prosecution case where this point was not put in evidence before the jury. It is the obvious duty of the prosecution to put forward the first information report in the case. Where the Judge in his charge to the jury merely passed over the omission to do so with a casual remark that the complaint has not been filed, it would amount to a misdirection and as the jury were not therefore properly charged, the verdict must be set aside. —Benefit of doubt.

In every charge to a jury it is well to include therein a direction that the prisoner must always be given the benefit of the doubt, but that doubt must be at reasonable and valid doubt. (Findlay, J. C.) SONIA KOSHTI v. EMPEROR. 99 I. C. 849 = 28 Cr. L. J. 177 =

—Supplementary trial.

Where there are two trials—one original and the other supplementary—the Judge at the supplementary trial should warn the jury that the accused must have a perfectly fair trial, and that the jury are not to be biassed by the result arrived at in the previous trial. It is neither necessary nor desirable for him to tell the jury the offences of which the first batch of the accused were convicted. (Walmley and Suhrwardy, J.J.)

Where prima facie the evidence is more or less equally balanced to the ordinary jury the Judge ought to give the usual direction to the jury that if they have any reasonable doubt in their minds as to the guilt of the accused they should give the accused the benefit of it. In such a case it is almost impossible to say that the omission of this very important portion of the charge to the jury might not affect the minds of the jury. (Young, J.) JAGMOHAN SINGH v. the evidence of witnesses "obfuscated by a cloud of unnecessary detail and exalted verbiage," without sifting and valuing it or marshalling it under separate heads." "It is worse than a waste of time to spread fine language and lofty homilies before a common jury." Similarly long and abstruse dissertations upon the law only tend to divert the attention of the jury from the essential points for consideration. A charge which avoids any expression of opinion amounts to a most unhelpful direction. An inadequate charge is vitiated for misdirection and non-direction. —Accused unrepresented.

Where the accused is represented and the case has been elaborately argued, the Court may not make the charge elaborate but simply direct the jury to take the arguments into consideration. But where the accused is unrepresented, it is particularly necessary that the judge should bring to their notice the arguments which would possibly have been used by a pleader; else there is a risk of the charge being attacked on appeal on the ground of non-direction. —Accuracy—Mention of—Two conflicting presumptions together.

It is essential that in the general observations which a Judge makes in the course of his charge to the jury he should be accurate and within the limits of what has always been allowed from time to time in criminal trials. The verdict of the jury should not be interfered with except where the charge taken as a whole cannot be supported. The passage in the charge to the jury ran as follows: "As there is a presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, so there is a presumption of truthfulness in favour of the witnesses. The presumption is rebutted if it is shown that the witness has told an untruth. But that would not justify you in rejecting his evidence in toto. You will have to carefully scrutinize his evidence and should accept it only to the extent to which it is supported by the evidence of other trustworthy witnesses and circumstances and probabilities of the case".

Held, that the language of the learned Judge may lead to misconstruction and he should not have put together the presumption of innocence in favour of an accused and the presumption in favour of the veracity of testimony adduced in a Court of justice. The two presumptions are in their nature different and should not be classed together in the manner in which it has been done by the learned Judge in this instance. (C. C.

As the law allows an appeal in cases of trial by jury on the ground of misdirections, the charge should be in such a form as to enable the Court of appeal to say that all points of law and fact were clearly and correctly and with sufficient fullness explained to the jury, having regard to the evidence adduced in the case. —Opinion of the Judge.

The duty of the Judge in summing up is to place the entire evidence, for or against the accused, before the jury and leave the ultimate decision of the question of fact to it. He is not debarred from expressing his own opinion upon the evidence, but it should be done in such a way as not to create any impression in the mind of the jury that it was a direction from the Judge which they should follow. (34 Cal. 698 and A. I. R. 1922 Cal. 192, Rel. on.) Apart from this, any advice from the Judge to ignore or neglect any evidence is improper. It is not proper to ask the jury to decide questions of fact without considering the whole of the evidence. 6 Bom. L. R. 31, Rel. on.

In a case where there are no eye witnesses and no sufficient evidence of motive, it is proper to leave the whole case to the jury. (Suhrawardy and Duval, J.J.) NAIBULLA SHAIKH v. EMPEROR. 96 I.C. 990=

—Words of the section.

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge to explain clearly to the jury the offence with which the accused are charged and in doing so the Judge should keep before him the words of the section defining the offence.

—Conspiracy case.

In a charge to the jury in a conspiracy case not only is it necessary that there should be a consideration of the conspiracy and the determination as to what was its nature and by what evidence it is proved, but unless it is quite clear that if there was a conspiracy all the accused were the members of it, there should be somewhere a separate statement and criticism of the proved actions of each of the members of the conspiracy. If this is not done the jury may take it for granted that all the accused were knowingly members of the conspiracy and that the only question before them was whether the conspiracy was criminal. —Dacoity case.

In cases of offences under S. 395, I. P. C. (dacoity) the Judge ought to explain to the jury what is necessary to constitute the offence of robbery as that offence is defined in S. 390 of the Indian Penal Code. If he does not, it is a real and not merely a technical defect. It is not to be assumed that every jurymen knows the legal distinction between theft and robbery and the defect arising from the omission by the Judge to explain to the jury the essential elements of the offence of robbery is not cured by the fact that evidence was given in the particular case which if believed by the jury would warrant their conviction of the accused on the charge of dacoity. (25 Cal. 711; 8 M. L. T. 82; 39 All. 348; 4 C. W. N. 193; 30 Mad. 44; (1903) A.W.N. 232, Ref. and Foll.) (Wazir Hasan, J. C.) NAWAB ALI v. EMPEROR. 81 I. C. 953=25 Cr. L. J. 1129=

—Dacoity—Judge omitting to point out the possible consequence of acquitting one of the five accused.

Prosecution alleged that five persons took part in the dacoity. The judge in his summing up pointed out to the jury that they must make sure that there was a dacoity and secondly whether each of the accused took part in it. He, however, omitted to make clear to the jury the possible consequence of acquitting any of the accused. Held, that the conviction was vitiated by an improper charge to the jury. In such a case, the Judge should point out that if it was not proved that five persons took part, the offence for which each one of them was liable to be convicted was robbery and not dacoity. —S. 297—Evidence—Discussion of.

—In summing up of evidence the Judge should not confine himself to detailing chronologically the evidence given by the witnesses for the prosecution without shifting or analyzing it and without directing the jury in any way upon the value or weight which ought to be or might be attached to it. He ought also to draw the attention of the jury to the defence raised. Omission to do either makes the Judge of little assistance to jury. (Cuming and Lort Williams, J.J.) *NATABAR HALDAR v. —Credibility of a witness.

It is no business of the Judge in charging the jury to assume the part of the defence counsel. It is his duty to place the evidence before the jury as he finds it and though the inference left to be drawn by the jury reasonably is that it would be unsafe to accept that evidence of a particular witness it is certainly open to the jury to believe what the witness said and to accept it if they chose to do so. —Ridiculing defence evidence at out set.

The Judge should not ridicule the defence at the very outset of the charge before the discussion of the evidence; for that may have a pernicious influence on the mind of the Jury and the Jury may thereby reject the whole defence theory without giving sufficient consideration to it. —Circumstantial evidence.

The correct principles in criminal trials are that in a case dependent upon circumstantial evidence the incriminating fact must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Where therefore, the Judge in a case depending not on the probative value of the circumstantial evidence but of the weighing of direct testimony of witnesses while charging the jury says "it should be established by the prosecutor beyond reasonable doubt that the circumstances are not merely consistent with the guilt of the accused but entirely inconsistent with his innocence" without explaining to the jurors in the light of the principle above enunciated, it amounts to misdirection. 17 C. —Interpretation of S. 34, I. P. Code.

The material portions of the Judge's charge to the jury were as follows:—

"Therefore in this case if these persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master, and if necessary, to kill him, and if death resulted, each of them is liable, whichever of the three fired the fatal shot.

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob, and if necessary to kill, and if death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty.

"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied on the other hand that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of this common intention, if that be so, then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

Held, that there was no misdirection and that the balance of authority and reason is against the limited interpretation placed on S. 34 of the Indian Penal Code in 41 Cal. 1072. (Mukerjee, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cuming and Page, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I. C. 353=28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411=25 Cr. L. J. 817=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—S. 297—Non-direction.

Where the charge to the jury contained no caution as regards the weight and the efficacy to be given to a dying declaration,

Held, that the verdict of the jury and sentence must be set aside. (Pearson and Jack, J.J.) EMPEROR v. SASHI KANTA DE. 34 C. W. N. 792=1930 Cr. C. 1154=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 754.

—Absence of material witnesses—Direction to draw inference.

Where the prosecution failed to produce material witnesses on the ground that they were relatives of the accused and where the trying Judge drew the attention of the jury to the explanation suggested by the prosecution for their absence, and said that it was for the jury to accept or reject it without saying that the jury would be at liberty to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution if the explanation suggested were not acceptable to them and where no specific mention was made to the jury by the Judge regarding the fact that no explanation was offered about the non-production of one of the material witnesses for the prosecution.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 297—Non-direction.

Held, that the omission of the trial Judge to direct the jury as to the inference they were entitled to draw if they were not satisfied with the explanation suggested for the absence of material witnesses was a non-direction amounting to a misdirection and to be a good reason for setting aside the conviction of the accused person. A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 257, Foll.; 36 Cal. 281, Ref.; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 481, Dist. (Jack and Pancridge, J.J.) NABABALI v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1108=34 C. W. N. 1151=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 708.

—Conduct of the complainant.

The failure to put to jury matters which ought to have been placed before them for their consideration amounts to a misdirection. Where the Judge omitted to state the defence case and also did not draw the attention of the jury to the conduct of the complainant and the accused,

Held, that the trial was vitiated. (Pearson and Patterson, J.J.) RAM CHARITAR DUBEY v. EMPEROR. 34 C. W. N. 954.

—Arguments for accused.

The Judge is not bound to address himself to every suggestion put forward by the defence. His duty is fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence respectively. (Macpherson and Dhavle, J.J.) RAMSARUP SINGH v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1009=9 Pat. 606=128 I. C. 121=A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 513.

—Meagre outline of facts and law.

Where in a charge to the jury the explanation of the law bearing on the subject is drastically meagre, and the summing up is no more than the barest possible skeleton of the evidence on the record, so that it is very doubtful whether the jury were afforded any real assistance by the Judge when he proceeded to sum up the case to the jury; and where from the record it is clear that important points which should have been brought to the notice of the jury were not brought to their notice, there is non-direction to the jury and such case is fit for ordering re-trial. 31 C.W.N. 387 and 34 Cal. 698, Ref. (C. C. Ghose and Jack, J.J.) DWARAKA DAS v. EMPEROR. 118 I.C. 351=33 C. W. N. 84=30 Cr. L. J. 912=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 170.

—Only witness discredited by Prosecution itself no evidence—Duty to direct.

In a trial by jury under S. 325, Penal Code, prosecution relied upon the evidence of a certain witness who was the only witness in the case and who could testify as to what had occurred. His evidence was considered hostile in some respects and the prosecution sought to discredit him. Judge did not direct the jury that there was no evidence.

Held, that this was a serious misdirection as there remained no evidence to go to the jury, the witness having been discredited and the trial was vitiated. (Cunning and Lort Williams, J.J.) MOKBULKHAN v. EMPEROR. 114 I. C. 793=56 Cal. 145=30 Cr. L. J. 350=32 C. W. N. 872=A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 690.

—Failure to record his summing up of law.

The failure on the part of a Sessions Judge to record in his charge what actually his explanation of the law was does not amount to a misdirection, which would vitiate the trial as having occasioned a failure of justice and so a re-trial cannot be ordered on this ground. A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 797; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1055; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 926; A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 460; 41 C.L.J. 474; A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 124 and 47 Cal. 795, Ref. to (Kulwant Sahay and Allanson, J.J.) CHOTAN SINGH v. —Infancy and immature understanding.

When the Judge attempts to exclude the consideration by the jury, of the question as to whether the accused was a boy under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act, his summing up upon the point amounts to a misdirection the question being one for the jury to decide notwithstanding no proof may have been adduced on the point. (Pullan, A. J. C.) EMPEROR v. ALI RAZA. 84 I. C. 454=26 Cr. L. J. 310=28 O. C. 69=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 311.

—When a ground of interference.

Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection, those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood. Non-direction when it consists in omission to put the material facts or to put the defence to the jury is sufficient to cause the Court to quash the conviction, if the Court comes to the conclusion that is reasonably probable that the verdict of the jury was affected thereby. (Mookerjee, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cumming and Page, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I. C. 353=28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411=25 Cr. L. J. 817=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—Arguments on behalf of accused.

Per Richardson, J.—If a defence is substantially put to the jury, a mere omission to refer to this or that circumstance or suggestion is not non-direction which amounts to misdirection. It is not the function of the Judge to repeat to the jury every argument or suggestion urged by the learned counsel for the accused. (Mookerjee, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cumming and Page, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I. C. 353=28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411=25 Cr. L. J. 817=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—S. 297—Omissions.

—Evidence of approver—Corroboration.

In dealing with the evidence of an approver the Judge should tell the jury that the sort of corroboration that is required is corroboration in material particulars tending to connect each of the accused with the offence. Where the jury are well aware of the kind of corroboration required, the omission to state the law in more precise terms does not amount to misdirection. But the omission of the Judge to draw the special attention of the jury to the fact that though there is some corroborative evidence as regards the movements of two of the accused in a case of dacoity immediately before and immediately after the occurrence, there is no such corroboration in respect of the third accused, amounts to misdirection. (Pearson and Patterson, J.J.) HACHANI KHAN v. EMPEROR. 127 I. C. 767=1930 Cr. C. 793=34 C. W. N. 390=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 481.

—Failure to examine important witness.

Held, that the Judge would be guilty of a misdirection is not telling the jury that it might and indeed should be presumed from the fact of his non-examination that if he had been examined his evidence would not have supported the case for the prosecution. (Pearson and Patterson, J.J.) HACHANI KHAN v. EMPEROR. 34 C. W. N. 390=1930 Cr. C. 793=127 I. C. 767=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 481.

—Material witness to prosecution—Absence of omission to direct.

There should be a substantive direction on the part of the trial Judge as to the view of the prosecution which the jury is entitled to adopt if they are not satisfied with the explanation offered for the absence of a witness material for the prosecution case. The omission of the trial Judge to direct the jury as to the inference they are entitled to draw in such a case is non-direction, amounting to misdirection sufficient to set aside a conviction. (Jack and Panckridge, J.J.) SHEIKH NABAB ALI v. EMPEROR. 1930 Cr. C. 1108=34 C. W. N. 1151=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 708.

C.R. P. CODE (1898), S. 297—Omissions.

—Prosecution alleged that five persons took part in the dacoity. The Judge in his summing up pointed out to the Jury that they must make sure that there was a dacoity and secondly whether each of the accused took part in it. He, however, omitted to make clear to the Jury the possible consequence of acquitting any of the accused.

Held, that the conviction was vitiated by an improper charge to the jury. In such a case the Judge should point out that if it was not proved that five persons took part, the offence for which each one of them was liable to be convicted was robbery and not dacoity. (Waller and Cornish, J.J.) SUBBIAH TEVAN v. EMPEROR. 1929 M. W. N. 789.

—Direction to ignore irrelevant evidence.

P was prosecuted for selling R a minor for immoral purposes and by producing a birth certificate of R proving that R was a major he got acquitted and subsequently he was charged for forging the birth certificate and the prosecution put in the complaint in that case and read them in full before the jury.

Held, the reading of the complaint in the former trial tended to depict the accused in the worst colours and an atmosphere of prejudice was created against accused thereby. The omission of the Judge in his summing up to draw attention of the Jury to this fact and to ask them to ignore the contents of the petition, was a non-direction of such a character as to amount to misdirection. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose, Sukraward, Mukerji and Jack, J.J.) PADAM PRASHAD UPADHYAYA v. EMPEROR. 119 I. C. 193=50 C. L. J. 106=33 C. W. N. 1121=30 Cr. L. J. 993=1929 Cr. C. 228=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 617 (S.B.).

—Law of private defence.

Where the law as to the right of private defence of a person as bearing on the facts set up had not been clearly placed before the jury, and their attention was not directed to find as to whether the accused was, and, if so, how far, justified, in preventing injury to himself, in attacking the deceased,

Held, that the charge, as delivered by the Judge, contained serious misdirection necessitating a retrial. (Sukraward and Duval, J.J.) ASIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 53 Cal. 980=28 Cr. L. J. 273=100 I. C. 353=7 A. I. Cr. R. 417=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 257.

—Conviction of co-accused—Warning as to not to be influenced.

If in the charge a reference is made to the fact that another person who was a co-accused of the accused under trial was sent up on a charge-sheet and convicted on trial it is also absolutely necessary to warn the jury and warn them very carefully, not to take into account the conviction of the co-accused at all, and an omission on the part of the Judge to give such a direction to the jury is an omission on a very vital point; and it must prejudice the accused person, and the verdict of the jury based upon a charge in which an omission of such vital character is noticed cannot be supported. (Cumming and Mukerji, J.J.) HARI CHARAN DAS v. EMPEROR. 27 Cr. L. J. 398=93 I. C. 46=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 728.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 297—Omissions.

—Discussion of probabilities.

In a trial by jury omission on vital points in the Judge's charge to the jury may amount to such misdirection as to vitiate the trial. Where the Judge's direction as to the probabilities puts the probabilities in favour of the prosecution too strongly before the jury and upon a mere assumption of the facts which the jury are not asked to find for themselves there is misdirection which vitiates the trial. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) CHHAKARI SHAIK v. EMPEROR. 26 Cr.L.J. 567=85 I.C. 711=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 439.

—Several accused—Direction as to individual consideration of the case.

Where there are several accused persons and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing, omission by the Court to ask the jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually is a very serious omission prejudicial to the accused persons. (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.) KHJIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 53 Cal. 372=42 C. L. J. 504=27 Cr.L.J. 266=92 I. C. 442=A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139.

—A verdict obtained from the jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot be sustained. (Cuming and Mukerji, J.J.) KHJIRUDDIN v. EMPEROR. 53 Cal. 372=42 C. L. J. 504=27 Cr. L. J. 266=92 I. C. 442=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 139.

—First information report—Variation in evidence.

The omission on the part of the Judge to present in his summing up to the jury the first information report and its variance with the depositions of several witnesses, named therein, has a material bearing on the case and constitutes serious misdirection sufficient to vitiate the verdict of the jury. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) JESSARAT v. EMPEROR. 87 I. C. 833=29 C. W. N. 526=26 Cr. L. J. 1009=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 729.

—Direction as to credibility.

Where one of the witnesses for the prosecution is himself suspected of being implicated in the offence, the jury should be directed not to accept his evidence without the most careful scrutiny. The omission to give such a direction amounts to serious misdirection. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) SATYA CHARAN MANNA v. EMPEROR. 88 I. C. 515=26 Cr. L. J. 1155=52 Cal. 223=A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 666.

—Benefit of doubt.

The omission to tell the jury that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt is not a misdirection vitiating the trial, though as a matter of practice it is as well to always end the charge with these words. (Baker, J.C.) RAHIM BEG v. EMPEROR. 92 I. C. 169=7 N.L.J. 208=27 Cr. L. J. 217=A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 154.

—Omission to define in detail offence charged.

An omission by the magistrate to give the jury a detailed definition of the offence charged is not a misdirection justifying reversal of verdict where the nature of the offence was fully described to the jury and the constituent factors fully understood by them. (Pullan, A.J.C.) JINDAR SINGH v. EMPEROR. 81 I.O. 808=25 Cr. L. J. 1032=A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 69.

—Incomplete statement of law.

Where the accused at his trial for murder pleaded self-defence to prevent robbery and the Sessions Judge had charged the jury expounding the law with regard to the right of private defence of the person.

Held, that the Judge erred in law in not directing the jury with regard to the private defence of property. (Greaves and Panton, J.J.) BASERUDDIN SHAIK v.

83 I.C. 528=28 C. W. N. 585=39 C. L. J. 525=26 Cr. L. J. 48=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 776.

—A grave omission to direct the jury on a cardinal matter in the case, cannot be made good merely by Counsel's calling attention to it at the termination of the summing up. It is one thing to indicate agreement with a submission made by Counsel; it is another to direct a jury effectively. (Mookerjee, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cuming and Page, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I.C. 353=28 C. W. N. 170=38 C. L. J. 411=25 Cr. L. J. 817=A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—Omission of counsel to take a possible defence—Judge is not relieved.

The substantial question is, whether the evidence for the prosecution and the case for the defence were fairly summed up. The mere fact that Counsel for the accused has failed to present to the Court a particular aspect of the case, cannot justify an omission on the part of the Judge to draw the attention of the jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused even on the prosecution evidence; it is the duty of the Judge to draw the attention of the jury to such possible view of the case, on the evidence, notwithstanding that it may have escaped the Counsel for the accused; in other words, the line of defence adopted by Counsel does not relieve the Judge of his duty. (Mookerjee, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cuming and Page, J.J.) EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I.C. 353=28 C.W.N. 170=38 C.L.J. 411=25 Cr. L. J. 817=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—Statement of law.

The omission of a Judge to lay down the law by which the jury are to be guided as required by S. 297, Code of Criminal Procedure, is something more than misdirection. It is a failure to comply with an express provision of the law and S. 537, of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not applicable in such a case. (Wazir Hasan, J.C.) NAWAB ALI v. EMPEROR. 81 I. C. 953=25 Cr. L. J. 1129=11 O. L. J. 315=A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 411.

—S. 297—Summing up.

—Distinction between manslaughter and murder not considered.

In the judgment of the lower Court which convicted the accused of murder without the aid of a jury there was not the slightest enquiry into whether, assuming that the shot which resulted in the death of the deceased was fired by the accused, the act amounted to manslaughter and not murder. There was no attempt to face the question of whether the standard of proof required to prove murder as against manslaughter, had in the case been reached.

Held, that if the case had been before a jury and the Judge had not explained to them the possibility of a verdict of manslaughter but had said if not accident the only alternative is murder, that would have been an erroneous summing up. The question as between manslaughter and murder being entirely undealt with and in the absence of evidence sufficient to reach the standard of proof necessary to involve a conviction for murder the conviction must be quashed. (Piscourt Dunderin.) BENJAMIN KNOWLES v. EMPEROR. 124 I.C. 578=31 Cr. L.J. 701=1930 Cr. C. 884=34 C.W.N. 599=A. I. R. 1930 P.C. 201=55 M.L.J. 127 (P.C.).

—Omission to point out the liberty of the jury—Judge's opinion.

In a lengthy charge, the trial Judge cannot be expected to pause at every step to assume to the jury, that matter of fact are matters for them. Where on the whole, it appears that the Judge has, not only in the opening portion of his charge but also several times in the course of it, pointed out the liberty of the jury to draw their own conclusions on questions of fact, it is hypercriticism to regard the charge as defective on that score simply because in dealing with a particular matter or at a particular stage, it was not in terms repeated that the jury were entitled to brush aside what might have been suggested as the opinion of the Judge. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose and Patterson, J.J.) EMPEROR v. PANCHU SHEIKH. 34 C. W. N. 1154 (F.B.).

Corroboration of approver's evidence.

Held, that in his summing up, the Judge is bound to draw the attention of the jury to the nature of the corroboration that the approver's evidence has from the other evidence in the case. (Pearson and Patterson, J.J.) HACHUNI KHAN v. EMPEROR.

Record as to statement of law.

The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury; and although it is desirable that record of the charge on question of law should be sufficiently full to show whether the elements constituting the offences charged have been properly and fully explained to the jury, High Court can refuse to interfere with the verdict where the Sessions Judge has failed to note in so many words that he had explained the law to the jury if it is satisfied from the charge as a whole and the verdict that the law was properly explained and there was no miscarriage of justice. (Macpherson and Dhaule, J.J.) RAMSARUP SINGH v. EMPEROR. 9 Pat. 606 = 1930 Cr. C. 1009 = A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 513.

Judge's opinion.

Where the Judge throughout his charge has several times cautioned the jury that they are not to accept his view of the evidence as they were the sole judges of facts the mere fact that the Judge gave expression to his opinion regarding certain evidence does not amount to misdirection. (Mirza and Murphy, J.J.) EMPEROR v. C. E. RING. 120 I. C. 340 = 53 Bom. 479 =

Marshalling of facts.

To avoid any misdirection or non-direction of jury it is absolutely essential in proper cases that every particle of evidence should be carefully scrutinized and compared and contrasted and substantial help and guidance should be given to the jury to avoid any miscarriage of justice. It is not sufficient merely to re-count and repeat chronologically the evidence as it had been given in Court by the various witnesses. It is necessary to sift and weigh and value the evidence. The final weighing is of course for the jury but the Judge ought to see that all essential facts go into the scales of justice and on the proper side of the balance. Further facts must be marshalled by the Judge under separate heads and in distinct compartments as they affect each separate incident in the story. Otherwise the evidence is to the jury simply a confused mass of discrepant, disconnected and contradictory details. (Cuming and Lort Williams, J.J.) NAGENDRA NATH v. EMPEROR.

Judge's opinion.

A charge to the jury which succeeds in avoiding any expression of opinion must generally amount to a most colourless and unhelpful direction and a Judge ought to tell the jury his opinion if any so long as he makes it clear they are at liberty to regard or disregard it as they

Intermediate verdicts are not recognised.

Five persons were accused under Ss. 302, 148 and 149, Penal Code; the prosecution alleged that the offence had taken place before dark. The Judge asked the jury to give an intermediate verdict on the question whether the offence was committed before or after dark and on the jury holding that the offence was committed after dark the accused were acquitted.

Held, that there was no proper summing up to the jury and that, therefore, the verdict ought not to be allowed to stand. The law does not recognize intermediate verdicts of jurors and the procedure adopted by the Judge was in contravention of the specific provisions of the law relating to charges to the jury and to the ascertainment of their verdict. (C. C. Ghose and Gregory, J.J.) GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL v. NASAR, DURZI. 33 C. W. N. 451 = 115 I. C. 257 = 30 Cr. L. J. 434 =

Offence of theft—Lapse of time.

In a prosecution for theft it is necessary that the judge should point out in his summing up to the jury that a considerable time had elapsed between the recovery of the stolen articles from the persons who had been put in possession of them by the accused and the theft. (Beasley, C. J. and Cornish, J.) MAYANDI THEVAN v. EMPEROR. 1929 M.W. N. 577.

Judge's opinion.

Where the trend of the charge was in favour of the accused and the Judge most carefully told the jury that they were not bound by his opinion, and if after considering everything their opinion was different from his, they were to be guided by their own opinion and not by his, it was by no means improper for the learned Sessions Judge to have indicated in cautious language his experience on the Bench that an explanation offered by the prosecution on a certain point was one which deserved the consideration of the jury. Duty of the Judge.

The fact that the evidence had been summarized at great length by both sides and the jury had taken notes from the arguments and had themselves made a complete summary of the evidence for their own convenience would not relieve the Judge from the duty of conforming to the provisions of S. 297, which distinctly lays down that he should sum up the evidence. 27 Bom. 644, Ref. The first point which a Judge must observe in making his summing up is that whatever he says to the jury, must be true. If he states that such and such fact is contained in the evidence, the jury are bound to believe him, and the mere fact that he includes in his summing up a statement which he has culled from the evidence, indicates to the jury that that piece of the evidence is important, and should be considered by them when giving their decision. It is also necessary that the Judge should obtain from the jury a decision on all the material points which go towards establishing a particular offence under the Penal Code. There is no objection if a Judge sums up strongly in favour of one and strongly against another accused. If that is his opinion, he is perfectly right to make it clear to the jury. But he is not justified in stating in his summing up that there was definite evidence against an accused, which as a matter of fact is not on the record. An accused cannot be said to have had a fair trial if the direction of the Judge was not only adverse to him but also omitted to obtain the decision of the jury on a material point, and contained a misstatement of facts which was prejudicial to the accused. 27 Bom. 644, Ref. Discrepancies.

A Judge should explain to jury the issues of fact which the jury has to determine upon the charge upon which the prisoners are being tried, and having made the jury understand these issues, the more convenient mode of summing up the case is to present the jury, as materially and impartially as he can, a summary of the evidence and the considerations and inferences to be drawn from the evidence, and as they appear both on the negative and the affirmative sides of the case. Merely telling the jury that there are material discrepancies without telling them about discrepancies is a clear misdirection, and telling a jury in a case under S. 377, Penal Code, over and over again about their moral conviction as to the guilt of the accused is also a misdirection. What it should contain.

The summing up must give a fair summary of the evidence on both sides, and the Court cannot do this unless it includes a reference to all evidence which is of vital importance in the case. The summing up must also be an intelligent summing up, and it is the Judge's duty to call the jury's attention to any flagrant contradictions in the evidence. He should at the same time naturally recall to the jury any explanation of the contradiction which has been suggested and leave it to them to decide on its adequacy. (Daniels, J.) DHIRAJI v. AKASI.

What it should contain.

The object of a summing up under S. 297 is to enable the Judge to place before the jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise for their consideration. Judge's opinion.

There is no harm in the trial Judge expressing his opinion on the fact and in fact it is his duty so to assist the jury provided that he is careful to express his opinion in such a way as not in any way to interfere with the duties of the jury to finally decide according to —Mere summarising evidence is not summing up.

The Judge in a proper summing up must formulate and specify simple issues for consideration, and collate the evidence pro and con bearing upon the issues in order to assist the jury to arrive at the correct decision thereon. Merely summarising the evidence, examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination of the different witnesses who have deposed at the trial, and putting before the jury all that has been said by the witnesses or by the lawyers appearing on the two sides and huddling together important facts as well as trivial points without any attempt at discrimination, instead of aiding the jury will only confuse them. Judge's opinion—Exhortation.

It is permissible for a Judge and especially in India, it is often necessary for a Judge, to express an opinion clearly to the jury, and it is also permissible, though not always or indeed often advisable, to admonish the jury as to their duty, but it is unfair to the jury if the Judge says to them "I am thoroughly convinced of the guilt of the accused. Return a just verdict. If you do not, both you and I will be disgraced for ever."

A Judge in his charge to the jury must not make an appeal or exhortation to the jury. Where the summing up is calculated to leave a misleading impression on the mind of the jury, that amounts to a misdirection.

A Judge may express his opinion in the charge to the jury but he should be careful to add that it is for the jury to form their opinion on the evidence. A Judge should not in his charge to the jury express his opinion in terms too dogmatic and unqualified and state his own view on important matters of fact so positively as to leave the jury no loophole for taking any other view; his doing so vitiates the verdict of the jury. It is not sufficient to say that such and such sections of the Penal Code were read and explained. When the law which the jury has to apply is complicated and not easy of comprehension by laymen, the necessity to show as to how it was explained to the jury becomes imperative. Moreover, mere explanation of the sections of the Penal Code in the words of the Judge without reading out the sections themselves is also undesirable. The sections must be read out to the jury and then explained to them. (Kulwant Sahay, and Allanson, J.J.) CHOTAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 111 I. C. 398=11 A. I. R. 91=7 Pat. 661=

—S. 298—Directions to jury.

—Reading of reports.

It is the duty of the Judge in his charge to the jury to place the facts clearly and explain the law with reference to the points for determination. The Judge must tell the jury how they should apply the law to the facts found by them. The practice of reading out head-notes or other portions of the reports of a case is a dangerous practice likely to confuse the jury. But the Judge may tell the jury how to apply the law laid down by the decisions of the High Court to the facts of the particular case.

When the defence takes up a plea of private defence, it is a serious defect if the charge merely indicates the argument but does not direct the jury how they are to apply the law in deciding the guilt or otherwise if they find facts giving rise to the right of private defence. ## —Hostile witness.

Judge should explain to jury situation arising in case of hostile witness—He should tell jury to reject evidence of such witness altogether—Omission to do so amounts to misdirection—Evidence of hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and rest rejected. ## —Evidence of co-accused.

Wherein the charge to the jury the Judge does not give any direction to the jury as to how they should treat and the weight they should give to evidence of an accused person as against his co-accused it is impossible to say how far such omission does not prejudice the accused and retrial should be ordered. (Cuming and Lort Williams, J.J.) BIKRAM ALI PRAMANIK v. EMPEROR. 124 I. C. 66=50 C. L. J. 467=1930 Cr. C. 139=57 Cal. 801=31 Cr. L. J. 610=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 139.

—Arguments for accused.

The Judge is not bound to address himself to every suggestion put forward by the defence. His duty is fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence respectively. (Macpherson and Dhaule, J.J.) RAMSARUP SINGH v. EMPEROR.
1930 Cr. C. 1009=9 Pat. 606=A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 513.

—During the trial on a charge of dacoity the Sessions Judge referred in his charge to the jury to the statement of a witness given before the committing Court to the effect that he had seen 18 or 19 persons coming out of the house of the accused. The witness was not examined before the Sessions nor was his deposition put in before the Court. Held, the trial was vitiated, as the learned Judge had brought in a piece of evidence of an extremely damaging character on a cardinal point, the effect of which on the jury it would be difficult to speculate upon. (Rankin, C. J. and Patterson, J.) KHADEM v. EMPEROR. 57 Cal. 940=1930 Cr. C. 1106=A. I. R. 1930 Cal. 706.

—Corroboration of accomplice.

Per Lort-Williams, J.—The Judge must not tell the jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accomplice. That is the function of the jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not. (Cuming and Lort Williams, J.J.) REBATI MOHAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 258=32 C. W. N. 945=56 Cal. 150=30 Cr. L. J. 435=12 A. I. Cr. R. 265=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 57.

—Corroborative evidence.

Though an omission to direct the attention of the jury to those portions of the corroborative evidence which amount to corroborative evidence in law would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements already stated, when in fact they do not do so. 29 Cal. 782, Foll. (Cuming and Lort Williams, J.J.) REBATI MOHAN v. EMPEROR. 115 I. C. 258=32 C. W. N. 945=56 Cal. 150=30 Cr. L. J. 435=12 A. I. Cr. R. 265=A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 57.

—It is not the duty of the Judge to discuss in detail each and every item of the evidence and any such discussion of the evidence by the Judge in the charge leads to a great risk of the Judge pressing his own view of the facts too positively. ## —Judge's opinion.

In many cases it is not merely permissible but also desirable that the Judge should tell the jury what view he has taken of the facts, in order to enable them to consider the facts properly and arrive at their own decision on them. 13 W. R. Cr. 34, Foll. (Newbould and Mukerji, J.J.) ABDUL RAZAK v. EMPEROR.

A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 269.

—Judge's opinion.

A Judge has a right to express his opinion. If he expresses an opinion, which is an unfair opinion and which prejudices the accused, the superior Court can, and should, interfere to remove the ill consequences of such action by finding misdirection. If the Judge attempts to take the case out of jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the jury, it is a case of misdirection; but if a Judge simply states the opinion which the law allows him to state, in such a manner that intelligent jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else, it is not necessary for him to add, as a safeguard, a remark that it is only his opinion and that the jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own. On questions of fact the Judge's opinion in no way binds the jury, but the Judge has a right to express it so that the jury may know what it is. It is not a Judge's duty to conceal his opinion but to state it. A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 116, Appl. (Stuart, C. J.) DES RAJ SINGH v. EMPEROR.

110 I. C. 577 = 5 O. W. N. 497 = 29 Cr. L. J. 721 = A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 326.

—Omission or misstatement likely to mislead.

A mere omission or a misstatement in a summing up is not itself a misdirection when the case has been fully heard by the Jury, but there is a miscarriage of justice where the omission or misstatement is such that the jury may probably be misled by it. R. v. Wann, 23 Cox. C. C. 183, Ref. (Findlay, J. C.) SOINA KOSHTI v. EMPEROR. 99 I. C. 849 = 28 Cr. L. J. 177 = 7 A. I. Cr. R. 333 = A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 117.

—Statement of law—Use of books.

Under the law of procedure it is the duty of the judge to explain to the jury the law applicable to the case, and it is the duty of the jury to accept the law as laid down by the Judge without any extraneous aid. If the jury is unable to understand the law fully and clearly it is the duty of the Judge to explain it to them afresh, but in doing so he cannot place before them the Penal Code or any legal treatise for the purpose of finding out the law; if he does so he fails in his duty. (Sahrawardy and Duval, J.J.) EMPEROR v. G. C. WILSON.

96 I. C. 270 = 30 C. W. N. 693 = 43 C. L. J. 537 = 27 Cr. L. J. 926 = A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 895.

Under the amended law it is the duty of the Judge to withhold from the jury's knowledge the statements made by a witness to the police unless they are proved in the manner provided by law at the request of the accused. (Newbould and B. B. Ghose, J.J.) GAHUR HOUL-DAR v. EMPEROR. 94 I. C. 593 = 30 C. W. N. 603 = 27 Cr. L. J. 641 = A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 793.

—Confession—Judge finding it voluntary.

Where the Judge made observations in his charge to the Jury to the following effect: "Taking the evidence and the circumstances and the probabilities into my consideration I am satisfied that the confessions in question were voluntary and I accordingly hold them to be so. It is for you to decide whether or not they are true."

Held, that the Jury have to decide independently whether the confessions were voluntary and it was not right, therefore to take away entirely from the Jury the consideration of the question as to whether the confessions were voluntary or not. It was the duty of the learned Judge to place before them the facts and circumstances pro and con, and ask them to form their own conclusions as to the character of the confessions. The omission to do the same is sufficient to vitiate the verdict of the jury. (Walmsley and Mukerji, J.J.) SHEIKH ABDUL v. EMPEROR.

—Formulation of questions—Practice.

The law does not expressly require a Judge to formulate, at the conclusion of the delivery of his charge, specific questions for the jurors' reply. Such a practice is, however, helpful in deciding the legal effect of jury's finding but the formulation of such questions requires great care and queries should be confined within the narrowest possible compass.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—In complicated cases the judge should, in his charge to the jury, not only explain the law, but should draw their attention to the evidence in the case and explain how they should apply the law to the particular facts of the case. —The law of evidence is part of the general law. —Jury allowed to disperse—Illegal.

There can be no doubt that S. 300 does not contemplate that the jury, after the Judge has summed up a case to the jury, will leave the precincts of the Court or be at large. The section clearly contemplates that after the Judge had delivered his charge the jury must then retire to the jury room and then and there consider its verdict. Where after the Judge's charge to the jury the latter were, owing to exceptional circumstance, allowed to disperse for several hours and then returned to the Court and considered and delivered their verdict.

Verdict by jury—Answers to questions by Judge showing that jury did not understand law.

In a trial for murder the jury at first stated that their unanimous verdict was that the accused was guilty of 'culpable homicide not amounting to murder'. In order to determine which degree of that offence the jury intended, the Judge proceeded to ask certain questions in order to ascertain which degree of the offence they referred to. From the answers given, the jury showed that they were in doubt as to what they did mean and that they did not understand the law on the point, and finally they asked the Judge to read to them a portion of a certain judgment which the Judge had explained to them in the summing up, on the question of inference to be drawn from the weapon used. The jury then asked permission to retire once more and consider matters. After some time they returned and unanimously convicted the accused under S. 303.

Held, that until the jury intimated under which part of S. 304 their first verdict fell, it would not in fact be accepted and recorded. It was incomplete. And as their subsequent answers to proper questions addressed to the jury showed that they had arrived at no unanimous verdict under S. 304 at all, it was the duty of the Court to send them back for further consideration. The subsequent verdict was the only clear verdict and as it was a unanimous verdict the Judge was bound to accept it. (Ruledge, C. J., Heald and Chari, J.J.) KING-EMPEROR v. NGA TIN GYL. 99 I. Sessions Judges are under no obligation to have or express their individual opinion upon really disputable questions of fact which are for the jury. If the Judge really disagrees with the verdict, that is, as a settled and considerate opinion then it is necessary for the ends of justice to refer the case; if he does not think it necessary his "disagreement" is not a reality and then he should not expose his inconclusive state of mind. —Judge's view is final.

It is not correct law to say that, if the High Court thinks that the Judge, in a case tried by jury, ought to have been of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case, the High Court can direct him so to do or can act as though he has, in fact, submitted the case. The conditions laid down are not merely that the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury, but also that the Judge is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case. It is quite impossible to direct the Judge to be clearly of a certain opinion and the language used by the statute shows that the Judge's view on that point is to be final for that purpose. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 307—Ends of justice.Discretion of the Judge.*

Section 307 quite clearly gives to the Judge a discretion in the matter of submitting a case to the High Court and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not clearly of that opinion his failure to submit the case is not a subject for interference by the High Court on appeal. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 47, Foll.; A. I. Circumstances about accused's guilt suspicious.

No doubt great weight attaches to the unanimous opinion of the jury on questions which are purely questions of facts, but where the whole case is a suspicious one and the real facts in connexion with the occurrence and the circumstances under which it took place have not been disclosed by the prosecution, then although the case which the defence put forward is also not true in its entirety, to convict the accused under such circumstances on the unanimous verdict of guilty by the jury is likely to cause a miscarriage of justice. High Court—Practice.

When the jury has, by a majority, acquitted the accused, it is necessary that the High Court, who cannot see the witnesses, must be very careful before substituting a conviction. It may be that the opinion of the jury ought not to have the same weight as that of the Judge. But it is necessary to show upon evidence that the case is such that the verdict of the majority is plainly unreasonable. Until that can be shown, it is not possible for the High Court to substitute a conviction. (Rankin, C. J. and Mukerji, J.) EMPEROR v. IZAZUDDIN. 117 I. C. 662 = 30 Cr. L. J. 804 = 32 C. W. evidence the Court of Reference will not interfere with the finding of the jury even though the Court is of opinion that it would have drawn the other inference if it had been a Court of Appeal. But where the inference drawn by the jury is manifestly inconsistent with the documentary evidence and with the conduct of the parties, the law makes it obligatory on the Court to interfere.

In a reference under S. 307 it is not sufficient to show that another jury might have formed a different opinion; what the prosecution has to show is that no reasonable body of men would have returned the verdict complained of. Verdict which would not be come to by a reasonable man.

It is not in every case if the verdict of the jury does not commend itself to the Sessions Judge that he is entitled to refer the case to the High Court. Verdict definitely and manifestly wrong—Different view by Judge.

It is not contemplated that a Sessions Judge who does not happen to agree with the verdict of a jury, should necessarily make a reference to the High Court, especially where pure questions of fact are involved which are matters for the decision of the jury and the jury alone. It is no justification for a reference that the Sessions Judge came to a different conclusion, on the evidence tendered, from that of the jury unless there is something to show that the verdict of the jury was manifestly wrong and definitely contrary to the weight of the evidence. Whether a particular witness is to be believed or not is a question for the jury. (Graham and Lort Williams, J.J.) MEAJAN HOWLADAR v. EMPEROR. 124 I. C. 523 = 31 Cr. L. J. 698 = 1929 Cr. —Contents of reference.

In order to justify a reference under S. 307 it is not necessary that the Judge should be able to describe the jury's finding as perverse. (Rankin and Chotzner, J.J.) JAHRUR SHEIKH v. EMPEROR. 98 I. C. 714 = 30 C. W. N. 912 = 45 C. L. J. 20 = 27 Cr. L. J. 1402 = A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1107.

—Perverse verdict.

The words "manifestly wrong" mean that the verdict of the jury must be so wrong that it amounts to a perverse verdict. It is only when, as a matter of fact, the Court can be of opinion that the verdict of the jury is perverse that High Court is entitled in a reference under S. 307, Criminal Procedure Code, to place its own opinion on the evidence against the opinion of the jury. S. 307 quite clearly gives to the Judge a discretion in the matter of reference and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall submit it. —Perverse verdict.

Where the verdict of the jury is perverse and patently erroneous and it is established that the verdict amounts to a gross miscarriage of justice, the High Court is entitled to draw its conclusions from the evidence as to the guilt of the accused.

The accused was charged under Penal Code, S. 394, was caught at the spot with a lathi. The prosecution evidence fully established the accused's guilt and the accused led no evidence to establish his innocence. The majority of the jury, however, gave a verdict of not guilty on the ground that the injuries caused to the complainant were trivial and that the stolen goods were not discovered in the accused's house.

Held, that the verdict of the jury was perverse. 2 A. L. J. 475, Ref. (Banerji and Sen, J.J.) EMPEROR v. JUKHAN. 119 I. C. 443 = 1929 A. L. J. 509 = 10 L. B. A. Cr. 80 = 11 A. I. Cr. 547 = 30 Cr. L. J. 1078 = A. I. R. 1929 All. 338.

—Where verdict is due to misdirection or misunderstanding.

Under S. 423 (2) the High Court is not authorised to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. —Perverse or manifestly wrong.

The High Court has full powers to re-open matters in connection with a verdict of acquittal by a jury where the Sessions Judge has disagreed with the verdict and has referred the case to the High Court under the section. But the High Court should interfere only when the verdict is perverse or clearly and manifestly wrong. The principle will secure the objects of the legislature in creating juries. Any undue interference with the verdict of a jury tends to diminish the sense of responsibility which it is desirable a jury ought to cherish. (Stuart and Mukerji, J.J.) EMPEROR v. —It is not enough to show that the High Court if it had tried the case as a Court of original jurisdiction, would upon the evidence on the record come to a conclusion other than the conclusion at which the jury have come but it must be shown by the Court before it sets aside the verdict of the jury on a reference under S. 307 that the verdict of the jury is so manifestly wrong that it must be set aside by the High Court. It is not enough to find that the defence theory is one which cannot be accepted, but it must be found whether on the evidence such as appears on the record it was not possible for the jury to take the view which they have taken. 41 Cal. 621, Foll. —Should not easily be set aside.

If the High Court is to interfere in every case of doubt in every case in which it may with propriety be said that the evidence would have warranted a different verdict then it must be held that real trial by jury is absolutely at an end, and that the verdict of a jury is of no more weight than the opinion of assessors. In a case under S. 307, the High Court which has not the opportunity to see the witnesses must act with great caution. The most careful note must often fail to convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements, those for which the open oral examination of the witness in the presence of prisoner, Judge and jury is so justly prized. In a reference by the Sessions Judge the High Court is to consider whether the verdict of the jury is manifestly wrong or perverse. —Considerations by High Court—Judge's opinion.

Where a Judge hears a case with a Jury and disagrees with the jury and disagrees to such an extent that he feels that he cannot accept their verdict, he is entitled to refuse to accept that verdict and then submits the case with his reasons to the High Court and the High Court then has thrown upon it the burden of examining for itself the entire evidence in the case deriving such assistance as it can by giving what is described as due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the Jury. The opinion of the Sessions Judge is the opinion as expressed in the reference or at the hearing. The opinion of the Jury might possibly be expressed in some other way but it will usually be found expressed in the verdict. The so called 'verdict' does not bind him. It becomes for all legal purposes a mere 'opinion' and this is what S. 307 refers to when it speaks of the 'opinion' of the Jury. If the Court comes to the conclusion on that evidence that it should not convict if the case came before it in the capacity of trying Judge, and in arriving at that conclusion it must give due weight to the fact that other persons have taken other views and have seen the witnesses, in such a case it is the duty of the High Court to acquit the prisoner. When once a reference is made to the High Court the language of the Code does not justify any undue preference being given to the opinion of Jury over that of the Judge. Held, that though in cases of this kind there is always a probability that the girl who has been kidnapped will be submitted to illicit intercourse such a conclusion is not inevitable and a contrary conclusion on the part of the Jury need not be necessarily perverse.

Held, further, that there is only a technical difference between the two sections and S. 363 provides the possibility of sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and that the Judge should, in view of his own summing up, have accepted the verdict of the Jury and passed a sentence according to law. —Power of reference—Exercise of.

In a case tried by jury, the jury by a majority of four to three found the accused guilty and Judge accepted the majority verdict of the jury and convicted and sentenced the accused: He stated in his order: "While this is a case in which there are certain doubtful factors, I hesitate not to accept the majority verdict of the jury, as this is the second time the accused have been tried by a special jury and a second time a verdict of guilty has been returned by the majority. It was essentially a case in which the jury must decide and I therefore accept their decision while not agreeing with it. I shall be glad if the accused get relief in the appellate Court."

It is imperative for the Judge to take the opinion of the assessors on the charge it is proposed to convict the accused on. It is not open to the Judge to put merely the charge of murder to the assessors, and when they have given their opinion on that charge and that charge only, then on his own motion and without asking any further opinion of the assessors, to find the accused guilty of something quite different. At the trial an accused may be charged with a major offence such as murder, and in the alternative with a minor offence such as being in effect an accessory to the crime. But it is only fair that a man should understand the charges that are made against him, and that the opinion of the assessors on those charges should be definitely asked, and only after this has been done a conviction on either the major or the minor charge should be sustained against the accused. Held, the Judge is not bound to ask the assessors to state their opinion as there is no charge for that offence; and as the offence of theft and one under S. 403 were also mentioned by the Public Prosecutor to the assessors, it is not a case of the Judge adopting a case not put to the assessors and even if there is irregularity it does not prejudice the accused. Held (Per May Oung, J.)—It is not perhaps easy to keep the mind entirely free from prejudice when the record and the police papers show that the prisoner in the dock is an ex-convict. But the provisions of S. 310 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, whereby in Sessions trials, all knowledge of previous conviction is rightly withheld from jurors and assessors until after the accused had either pleaded, or been found guilty, indicate the importance of the complete exclusion of such knowledge when weighing the evidence as to the truth or otherwise of the main charge. The principle underlying the legal provision may also be seen in S. 54 of the Indian Evidence Act under which a previous conviction is declared inadmissible against an accused person, except where evidence of bad character is relevant. The word "him" in S. 337 (2-A), does not refer to the person who has accepted a tender of pardon but refers to the accused. What the provision of law means is that wherever an approver is examined, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial but must commit the accused persons for trial to the Court of Sessions. It does not mean that the approver should be committed for trial along with the accused persons. (Dalal, J.-C.) EMPEROR v. PERU. 88 I. C. 736=2 O. W. N. 464=12 O. L. J. 542=26 Cr. L. J. 1216=A. I. The local Government prosecutes offenders. There is no law that it must prosecute every offender, and it is well known that offenders do manage to conceal their misdeeds or that evidence is found insufficient. There is nothing to prevent the prosecuting authority from refraining from prosecution. The discretion to refrain from instituting a prosecution in any particular case is inherent in the authority to which the Law has entrusted the power to institute a prosecution. It makes no difference to the competency of the witness if that assurance of non-prosecuting is communicated before the witness makes any statement. The local Government is quite entitled to give such an assurance or amnesty and it is also entitled to ratify what has already been done by the enquiring officer. Such an assurance therefore in no way affects the competency of the witness to whom it is given, though it may affect the credibility of his evidence. Such an assurance is not contrary to Ss. 163 and 343 of the Cr.P. Code. A.I.R. 1923 All. 91, Foll. (Prideaux, A.J.C.) ANANT WASUDEO v. EMPEROR.

Although a pardon had been tendered to and had been accepted by one of the accused in the committing Magistrate's Court he was still considered as an accused who was to take his trial. His name was in the category of the accused and at the opening of the trial in the Sessions Court his plea was taken (the plea being one of guilty). When it was brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge that a pardon was tendered to that accused, and was accepted by him he was removed from the dock. The trial then proceeded and he was examined as a prosecution witness.

Held, that he was competent to give evidence and his evidence was admissible. (Rankin, C. J. and C. C. Ghose, J.) HAJI AYUB v. EMPEROR. 54 Cal. 539 = 103 I. C. 545 = 8 A. I. Cr. R. 309 = 28 Cr. L. J. 689 = A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 680.

—S. 337—Scope and object of.

S. 337 of the Code is only an empowering section and empowers certain Courts of Justice in certain classes of cases namely those triable by Courts of Sessions and the High Court, to tender pardon to a person supposed to have been concerned in the offence under inquiry. It does not apply to a case under S. 161 of the Penal Code which is triable by a Magistrate of the First Class also. But the non-applicability of the section does not render the accomplice evidence in such cases inadmissible. It only means that outside the provisions of S. 337, the Legislature has not provided any method by which a Local Government can provide an accomplice with a judicial order which he can, if necessary, plead in bar of his own prosecution. On the conclusion of a trial the Magistrate ordered the police to prosecute a person who had given evidence as an approver, of the original offence for which he had been originally arrested. The Magistrate overlooked the provisions of S. 339 of the Code. The accused went before a Magistrate, who also overlooked those provisions. The Magistrate, committed the accused to the Court of Session on charges of murder, etc. On the case coming up for trial, the Sessions Judge notified the absence of the certificate from the Public Prosecutor. The trial was adjourned. On the adjourned date, a certificate was filed and accepted by the Sessions Judge, and the trial proceeded.

Held, that the Magistrate was duly empowered to commit the case. The proceedings before him were merely an enquiry and what was forbidden by the provisions of S. 339 was the trial of the accused which, in this particular case, had to be a trial by a Court of Session as a Court of Original jurisdiction.

—Spirit of the law should be adhered to.

When after the commencement of the trial an application is made for an opportunity to engage a pleader the reasonable course to adopt would be for the Magistrate to proceed with the evidence for the prosecution-in-chief and then, to allow, if it had not already been allowed, a reasonable time for the accused to appoint a pleader. The accused's pleader ought to be given a reasonable opportunity to cross-examine the Prosecution witnesses. The fact that the accused who have been refused an opportunity to engage a pleader were asked if they wished to cross examine and that they answered that they did not wish to do so is only a literal compliance with the law and a breach of its spirit.
